New! Race and Racial Differences: A Handbook for the 21st Century

How DNA Shapes Mankind Into Seven Major Races

The first honest, updated DNA/geneological study done on the human race in 50 years. With 64 photographs, 16 illustrations, seven maps, six tables, and 11 explanatory charts.

RACE AND RACIAL DIFFERENCES
A HANDBOOK FOR THE 21ST CENTURY
HOW DNA SHAPES MANKIND INTO SEVEN MAJOR RACES
WITH 64 PHOTOGRAPHS, 16 ILLUSTRATIONS 7 MAPS, 6 TABLES, AND 11 CHARTS.
Arthur Kemp B.A.

Race is real, it is biological in nature, and it is shaped and determined by genetics alone. This book is the first to conclusively show exactly how races are physically and psychologically shaped by individual genes.

Using data and references from dozens of highly reputable scientists and journals, this fully referenced work starts with an overview of the development of the study of race, from the earliest times up to the very latest advancements in DNA analysis.

From there, it provides a comprehensive yet easily understandable overview of how human DNA works, which is vital to any understanding of how genes, at a Single Nucleotide Polymorphism (SNP) level, are responsible for shaping individuals.

When large numbers of people share similar SNPs, they form distinct groups which manifest themselves as "races."

Human DNA is made up of three major components: Y-chromosomes, mtDNA (which is inherited unchanged through the male and female lines), and autosomal DNA. When these three components are plotted according to their geographic locations, they dramatically divide into seven distinct regions. Each region clusters according to genetic similarity—the classic definition of race.

This science of genetic clustering is used by all the "home DNA testing kit" companies to provide "ancestry and origin" results. It provides unequivocal proof of the biological existence of race, and definitively destroys any claims that race is a "social construct."

This work builds on the seven regions reality by probing deeper and revealing the exact genes and SNPs—by name and location in the chromosomes—which determine the physical differences we see before us as racial types.

Then the process whereby these genes are unequally distributed among the seven major regions is discussed—and how this differentiated genetic distribution has created different races.

In this way, the genes which are responsible for eye color, hair color, hair texture, skull shape, facial features, skeletal structure and, finally, psychology and intelligence are all individually named, leaving no doubt as to the genetic basis of race.

The seven different races are then named. Then, in a first for this century, these seven major races—and all their subgroups—are reviewed in an illustrated racial typology section which lays bare the vast genetic diversity of mankind.

Finally, the book ends with a definitive, fact-based, refutation of the five major race-denial claims.

There is literally no other book on the topic of race like this in the world. It is a handbook on race, DNA, and racial typology for the 21st Century.

Uncensored American History

Secret History of the Wild, Wild West: Outlaws, Secret Societies & the Hidden Agenda of the Elites

Drawing on his great-great-grandfather's secret diaries, Daniel J. Duke unravels the hidden history of the Wild West to expose the outlaws, politicians and secret societies who were pulling strings behind the scenes. He examines Jesse James's close ties with notorious outlaws like Johnny Ringo, Jesse Evans and Billy the Kid. He demonstrates how Jesse faked his own death and lived out his life under an alias, and how Billy the Kid did the same. He also details how both Jesse and Billy continued their work for the nameless organization after their faked deaths. Also explores how Jesse was related, by blood or marriage, to many powerful people including Lyndon Johnson and Harry Truman. Softcover, 208 pages, #944, $17.

War on the Border: Villa, Pershing, the Texas Rangers & an American Invasion

Jeff Guinn tells the riveting narrative of Pancho Villa's bloody raid on a U.S. border town that sparked a violent conflict with the U.S.A. The "Punitive Expedition" was launched in retaliation under Gen. John J. Pershing and brought together the Army, National Guard and the Texas Rangers—who were little more than organized vigilantes at the time. Opposing this brigade was Pancho Villa, a guerrilla fighter who commanded a motley force of conscripts in Mexico. Curtiss Jenny airplanes did reconnaissance, another first. But, despite some bloody encounters, the expedition eventually withdrew without capturing Villa. Today, the U.S.-Mexico border remains as vexed and volatile as ever. Hardback, 368 pages, #941, $28.

American History Revised: 200 Startling Facts That Never Made It Into the Textbooks

Author Seymour Morris Jr. colorfully illustrates—via the 200 historical vignettes that make up this book—that much of our nation's past is quite different—and far more remarkable—than we thought. Though we do not necessarily agree 100% with every single conclusion contained in the 200 tales presented, it is loaded with enough REAL history to make it a very worthwhile gift for a history professor, student or free-thinking young scholar. Find out about the biggest mistake the Ford Motor Co. ever made, why Eleanor Roosevelt opposed the Equal Rights Amendment, the No. 1 bestselling American book of all time that was written in one day, the bad investment the Dutch made when they bought Manhattan, how two young girls aimed to become first lady—and did, plus dozens more little-known facts about American history you may not know. Organized into 10 thematic chapters, the book plumbs American history's least-known and sometimes shocking twists. Softcover, 432 pages, #950, $20.

The Spy Who Changed History: The Untold Story of How the Soviets Stole America's Top Secrets

Svetlana Lokhova takes us on a thrilling journey through Josef Stalin's most audacious intelligence operation. In September 1931, Soviet spy Stanislav Shumovsky walked off the SS Europa and into New York, concealed in a group of 65 Soviet students. Stalin had sent him to acquire U.S. secrets to help close the USSR's massive technology gap. The road to victory began in the classrooms and laboratories of MIT. Using information gleaned from this mission, the USSR transformed itself into a military powerhouse able to defeat Hitler's Germany. Later, other MIT-trained Soviet spies would acquire the secrets of the Manhattan Project. Lokhova pieces together every aspect of Shumovsky's life using American and Russian archives—and offers a lesson on how America's secrets get stolen. Hardback, 496 pages, #947, $30.

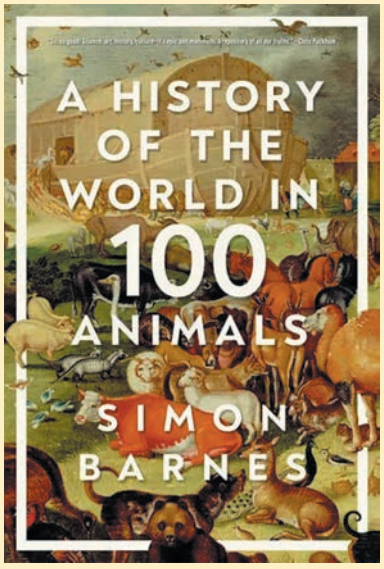
A PERFECT BOOK FOR A BUDDING SCHOLAR OR A TRAINED REVISIONIST!

A History of the World in 100 Animals—in color

Fully illustrated in color, a fascinating exploration of the 100 animals that have had the most profound influence on humanity throughout the ages.



We are not alone. We are not alone on the planet. We are not alone in the countryside. We are not alone in cities. We are not alone in our homes. We are humans and we love the idea of our uniqueness. But the fact is that we humans are as much members of the animal kingdom as the cats and dogs we surround ourselves with, the cows and the fish we eat, and the bees who pollinate so many of our food-plants.

In A History of the World in 100 Animals, award-winning author Simon Barnes selects the 100 animals who have had the greatest impact on humanity and on whom humanity has had the greatest effect. He shows how we have domesticated animals for food and for transport, and how animals powered agriculture, making civilization possible.

He posits that the wholesale slaughter of bison in North America in the 19th century, for example, was responsible for the United States becoming "the nation it is today" because it removed a major resource for American Indians; that a plague spread by fleas in 14th-century Europe led to changes in religion after the Black Death; and that "whales changed human possibilities" thanks to the oil made from their blubber, which "provided a genuinely bright source of illumination" and made the night a time for productivity.

He explains how pigeons made possible the biggest single breakthrough in the history of human thought. In short, he charts the close relationship between humans and animals, finding examples from around the planet that bring the story of life on Earth vividly to life, with great insight and understanding.

Throughout, the author demonstrates many lessons humans can learn from the animal kingdom: the platypus, for example, shows that "there are creatures queerer than we are capable of supposing," and the realization of dolphins' intelligence has led to "rethinking about the place of humans in the world." Vivid illustrations are a bonus to Barnes's moving prose, as when he notes that the saola, a forest-dwelling bovine discovered in Vietnam in 1992, was "the land's last secret. The age of finding is over; we are already deep in the age of losing." Hardback, full color, 496 pages, 6 x 9, #930, $40 minus 10% for TBR subscribers plus $5 S&H inside the U.S. from TBR, P.O. Box 550, White Plains, MD 20695. Call TBR toll free at 1-877-773-9077 to charge, Mon.-Thu. 8-4 ET.

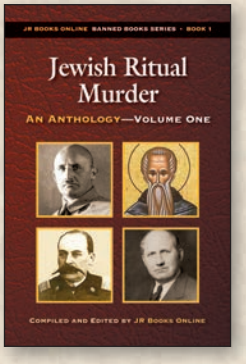
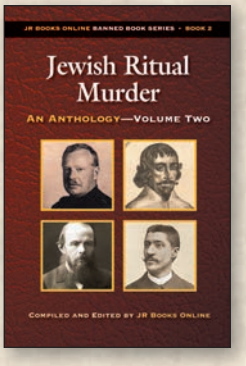
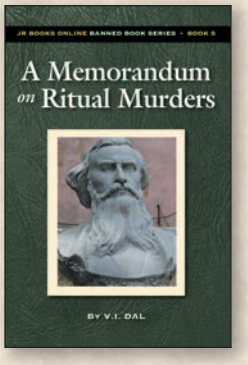
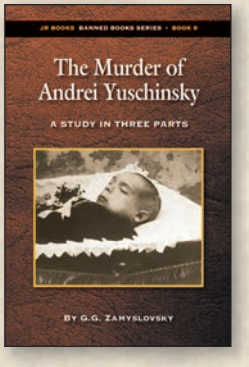
Ritual Murder

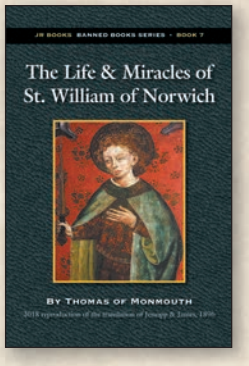
Outlandish accusations or outlandish crimes? The court trials, evidence and witness accounts . . .











Jewish Ritual Murder: An Anthology —Volume 1

Volume One of the two-volume Jewish Ritual Murder Anthology Series begins with Julius Streicher's Der Stürmer Special Ritual Murder issue and continues with Cardinal Lorenzo Ganganelli's Report, Walsh's Isabella of Spain, Neophytos's A Testimony of Ritual Murder and I.I. Lyutostansky's On the Use of Christian Blood by the Jews, with a few smaller items of interest. Volume One: Softcover, 467 pages, #933, indexed, $30.

Jewish Ritual Murder: An Anthology—Volume 2

Volume Two of the two-volume Jewish Ritual Murder Anthology Series contains: My Irrelevant Defence by Arnold Spencer Leese, A Short Demurrer by William Prynne (1600-1669), two articles from La Civiltà Cattolica, a fragment from The Brothers Karamazov by Dostoyevsky, Murdered by Jews by Desportes—an account of the murder of a Christian boy in Damascus—and two articles by Harold Covington. The volume concludes with a translation of Jewish Ritual Crime by Albert Monniot. Volume Two: Softcover, 424 pages, #934, $30.

Both JRM Anthology Volumes as a Set: $50—#935.

A Memorandum on Ritual Murders

One of the most famous ritual murder trials occurred in the Russian town of Velizh in the early 19th century after the mutilated and exsanguinated corpse of a little Christian boy had been found in the forest. Although the Jewish culprits would be eventually acquitted, the ritual nature of the murder would still be firmly established. That trial is described in detail, along with many other cases of ritual murder. Written in 1844 by V.I. Dal, famed for his mammoth explanatory dictionary of the Russian language. Dal told the truth here because no one could censor him. In czarist Russia, one could speak freely on this subject, which is no longer the case in the present-day "democratic" Russian Federation. Softcover, 141 pages, indexed, #937, $20.

The Murder of Andrei Yushchinsky

By G.G. Zamyslovsky. Shortly before World War I, the Russian Empire was shaken by the brutal murder of Andrei Yushchinsky, a 13-year-old boy whose exsanguinated body, bearing all the traces of ritual murder, was found in March 1911 on the outskirts of Kiev. The ensuing trial, held in the autumn of 1913, attracted wide attention not only in Russia but also in Europe—and even the United States. Mendel Beilis was the ony defendant. Although he was acquitted by the jury, the same verdict also insisted it was a ritual murder, one committed in a Jewish brick factory. Also included in the book is the expert opinion of Roman Catholic priest I.B. Pranaitis. Softcover, 486 pages, #940, $35.

The Life & Miracles of St. William of Norwich

Was an innocent boy in 12th-century England brutally murdered by bloodthirsty fanatics? This book is the full manuscript of Benedictine monk Thomas of Monmouth who, in A.D. 1173, chronicled the murder of William of Norwich. Thomas claimed William, a 12-year-old tanner's apprentice, had been ritually murdered by Jews in contempt of the Christian faith. It's the first such account, specifically that of Jewish ritual murder of a child, in the historical record. This edition is complete and unabridged as translated by Cambridge academicians Jessopp & James in 1896. Softcover, 170 pages, indexed, #939, $20.

Unsolved Mysteries of the Past Explained

Survivors of Atlantis: Their Impact on World Culture

Ancient Indian tradition speaks of fair-skinned mariners who "dug out the shiny bones" of the Earth Mother. Plato, meanwhile, recorded that "Atlanteans" had an exceptionally high grade of copper no longer available in his time. Author Frank Joseph argues that the real copper miners were survivors of a great cataclysm and that the destruction of an advanced ancient culture by war and natural causes brought about the end of the Bronze Age. Survivors dispersed from their former empire into Europe, the Near East and North and South America. S*urvivors of Atlantis* provides an in-depth study of the four great cosmic catastrophes and how this quartet of natural disasters was followed by mass migrations recorded by the Incas, Kelts, Greeks and Aztecs. Where science meets mythology, a common thread is exposed: the legendary Atlantis. Softcover, 280 pages, #943, $16.

Patriot or Traitor: The Life and Death of Sir Walter Ralegh

Sir Walter Ralegh—heroic, courageous, gifted, grasping, a poet, politician and spy, an explorer, dreamer and schemer, an iconic Renaissance man—lived an amazing life. He rose to become Queen Elizabeth's favorite, only to be charged with treason by her successor. Less than a year after the death of Elizabeth I, Ralegh was in the Tower of London, watching as the scene was set for his own execution. Patriot or Traitor tells the dramatic story of his rise and fall. It is a beautifully written and researched biography. Here is a fresh perspective on one of the most colorful and controversial characters of his age. Historian Anna Beer brings Ralegh to life as never before with colorful detail and astute interpretation as we follow Ralegh's dramatic rise and disastrous fall. Softcover, 336 pages, #946, $18.

The Man in the Iron Mask: The True Story of Europe's Most Famous Prisoner

By Josephine Wilkinson. Here's a thrilling adventure story, a glamorous and all-powerful king, ambitious ministers, a cruel and despotic jailor, dark and sinister dungeons—and a secret prisoner who actually existed. It is easy to forget that this story, made famous by Alexandre Dumas, is that of a real person, Eustache Dauger, who spent more than 30 years in the prisons of Louis XIV. This is the true story of this mystery man and his journey through four prisons and decades of time. It details those who shared his imprisonment, his jailers, those who decided his fate—and why they viewed him as a threat. We see what life was like for state prisoners, why this man was arrested and why his story would become one of France's most intriguing legends. Hardback, 352 pages, #945, $29.

America Before: The Key to Earth's Lost Civilization

Was an advanced civilization lost to history in the global cataclysm that ended the last Ice Age? Bestselling author Graham Hancock has made it his life's work to find out. Hancock draws on the latest archaeological and DNA evidence to bring his quest to a stunning conclusion—one that could change the timeline of history. We've been taught that North and South America were empty of humans until around 13,000 years ago. New discoveries have radically reshaped this stale narrative. We now know that the Americas were peopled more than 130,000 years ago. Hancock's research takes us on a scientific journey from the Mississippi Valley to the Amazon rainforest and reveals that ancient "New World" cultures share a legacy of advanced knowledge and spiritual beliefs with supposedly unconnected "Old World" cultures. Have archaeologists focused for too long only on the Old World in their search for the origins of civilization? Hancock offers compelling proof from across the Americas that will make you wonder. Softcover, 608 pages, #949, $20.

Johann Ewald: Jäeger Commander

Johann Ewald began as a commoner in one of the states of the Holy Roman Empire who rose above the constraints of his time. As a soldier, he fought in all of the great conflicts of the latter 18th century, the Seven Years' War, the American War of Independence and the Napoleonic Wars. He keenly recorded his observations of both the people he met and places he encountered throughout these adventures. Ewald stood as one of the most accomplished practitioners of irregular warfare in his era. Beginning his military career in the Seven Years' War, and continuing through the American War of Independence, he wrote several works based on his experiences, one that was lauded by Frederick the Great. Among all but a small group of scholars, however, Ewald has vanished into obscurity. There are no other English-language biographies of Ewald besides James McIntyre's biography. This is it! Softcover, 400 pages, #954, $19.

Lawbreaking Ladies: 50 Tales of Daring, Defiant and Dangerous Women from History

Discover 50 fascinating tales of female pirates, fraudsters, gamblers, bootleggers, serial killers, madams and outlaws in this illustrated book of lawbreaking and legendary women throughout the ages. This book looks at women from the past who weren't afraid to break the law, challenge their male counterparts or the idea that women belong at home, barefoot and pregnant. From pirates to madams, gamblers to bootleggers and outlaws, women haven't always decided to be sugar, spice and everything nice, as you will see! Author Erika Owen offers a perfect gift for true crime fans and lovers of little-known women's history. Lawbreaking Ladies serves as an engaging and informative guide to gals who were daring, defiant, and sometimes downright dangerous. Take a break from the stress of the world and enjoy a completely different kind of book—or purchase it as a gift for a naughty gal you know! Hardback, 208 pages, #948, $20.

The Search for Life on Mars: The Greatest Detective Story of All Time

Mars is the most likely other habitat for life in our solar system. Now the Red Planet is coming under scrutiny as never before. New missions have been launched from the United States and China, and the ExoMars mission is scheduled for this year. This book recounts in full the greatest scientific detective story ever—the search for life and the efforts underway to find it on Mars. This is the definitive story of how life will be found somewhere and sometime this century. Based on more than 100 interviews with experts at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory and elsewhere, this is the one book on Mars you need to read. Softcover, 424 pages, #932, $18.

Unique Books for Revisionists

Stalin's War: A New History of WWII

Sean McMeekin reveals how Stalin —not Hitler—was the driving force of WWII in this major new history. WWII endures in the popular imagination as a heroic struggle between good and evil, with villainous Hitler driving events. But Hitler was not in power when the conflict erupted in Asia—and he was dead before it ended. His armies did not fight in multiple theaters, did not span the Eurasian continent, and he did not inherit any of the spoils of war. Those belonged to Stalin. Drawing on new research in international archives, Stalin's War revolutionizes our understanding of this global conflict by moving its epicenter to the east. McMeekin shows the war that emerged in Europe in 1939 was the one Stalin wanted, not Hitler. So, too, did the Pacific war of 1941-1945 fulfill Stalin's goal of unleashing a war between Japan and the "Anglo-Saxon" capitalist powers. Hardback, 864 pages, #927, $40.

Mass Murder at Katyn

Here is the first-ever full English translation of the complete forensic report by the German government detailing the mass murder of Polish citizens by the USSR's secret police in Katyn Forest, originally published in 1943. Dismissed as "propaganda" and ignored for nearly 50 years, this report was accurate, and, if anything, an understatement of the Bolshevik crimes. The report starts with the discovery of the mass graves and then produces a series of eyewitness accounts of the captive Poles being transported to the site of the executions. Next, the reader is given a thorough account of the environment and its effect upon buried bodies—this establishes the time of death—before providing postmortem studies. These postmortem reports—carried out by an unbiased international team of doctors, overseen by the Red Cross and Allied POWs—revealed that the victims had each been executed with a single shot to the back of the head. The next section details the Allied response to the revelations: The false claim that they had been committed by the Germans. Softcover, 290 pages, 8.5" x 11" format, #929, $28.

Classic Essays on the Jewish Question: 1850 to 1945

Uncensored essays from such well-known figures as Richard Wagner, Fyodor Dostoyevsky and Theodor Fritsch to virtual unknowns like Frederick Millingen and Wilhelm Marr discuss the most taboo subject of all. Their words are potent, compelling and "racist." Now, for the first time, 16 classic essays on this issue are compiled into a single volume. These essays are difficult to find, even in the internet age, for obvious reasons. These kinds of essays are not only frowned upon in America, several states are pushing for an outright ban if not future criminalization for those writing or distributing them. In Europe, as we all know, dozens of nations have passed laws making open discussion of this issue a criminal offense. When found, these essays are almost always incomplete. When found complete, they are poorly translated and edited. The aim of the present book is to alleviate this shortcoming and to offer full information so readers can decide for themselves if the authors contained herein are blazing "anti-Semites" or actually have a reasonable cause for concern. Softcover, 370 pages, #931, $23.

Jewish Freemasonry

By Édouard Drumont & Nicolae Paulescu. Introduction by Dr. Alexander Jacob. The two principal anti-Masonic texts presented in this edition shed some light on the Jewish origins and ambitions of the Freemasonic organization. The first of the texts is taken from the French journalist Édouard Drumont's famous work on the Jews La France Juive: Essai d'histoire contemporain, 2 vols. (1886) while the second is from the Romanian scientist and political activist Nicolae Paulescu's The Hospital, the Koran, the Talmud, the Kahal and Freemasonry (1913). Both authors discuss the contrast between the "Jewish character" of the Masonic ethos and the social doctrines of the Catholic Church. The authors allege a prime goal of Masonry has always been to replace Christianity as a political force in the West. Softcover, 136 pages, #928, $15.

Kristallnacht: Anti-Semitic Pogrom or False Flag?

By Marc Roland

4 The Night of Broken Glass, or Kristallnact as it's known in German, is presented by Court Historians as a Nazi-backed and sponsored pogrom launched to exact revenge against the Jews for murdering a German diplomat. There is much more to the story, as Marc Roland explains in this article.

The Fate of Hungarian Jews At Auschwitz-Birkenau

By John Wear, J.D.

14 What really happened to the hundreds of thousands of Hungarian Jews deported to Auschwitz during WWII? Outlandish claims made by establishment historians and organized Jewish groups are examined and refuted.

French Revisionist Arrested By European Thought Police

By Jérôme Bourbon

20 Vincent Reynouard, a leading French Revisionist, was arrested once again, this time in Scotland. He currently faces extradition to France for his "thought crimes," as French journalist and editor Jérôme Bourbon reports.

Killing Rivarol

By Rémi Tremblay

26 Rivarol, whose editor authored the previous article, is a leading French dissident and nationalist newspaper. Despite outrageous persecution by anti-free speech actors determined to destroy the publication, Rivarol is still publishing, as Rémi Tremblay explains.

A Letter to My Nephew

By Angela Woywood

30 Longtime TBR reader and subscriber Angela Woywood pens a genuine, heartfelt, and quite persuasive letter to her nephew in an attempt to unpack and clarify all the lies endlessly disseminated about WWII and the "evil Nazis." Broaching these taboo topics is never an easy task, as readers well know.

Israel's Samson Option And Nuclear War Scenarios

By Marc Roland

42 The ongoing conflict in Ukraine, which ultimately pits the collective West against Russia and its allies, has increased the risk of all-out nuclear war to a level perhaps never seen before in history, including even the tense months of the Cuban missile crisis. Today, Israel continues to be a wildcard with its not-so-secret nuclear arsenal and "Samson Option" nuclear policy, as Marc Roland explains.

Israel Driving Multiple Ethnic Cleansing Operations

By Antonius J. Patrick

50 TBR's Antonius J. Patrick reviews two critical books—The Disappearing People: The Tragic Fate of Christians in the Middle East by Stephen M. Rasche and The Ethnic Cleansing of Palestine by Ilan Pappe. These books both, in their own way, detail how the Israelis are systematically wiping out religious "competition" in the Mideast.

Father James Keller and the Crusade Against Communism

By Mike Mains

58 Few are familiar with Father James Keller, an important American Catholic thinker, activist and early crusader against Communism. Researcher and author Mike Mains provides the background, significance, and legacy of Father Keller and his anti-Communist organization The Christophers.

Remembering a Great Historian: A Tribute to Udo Walendy

By Carolyn Yeager

PERSONAL FROM THE EDITOR

Nice to Meet You, 2023!

Will 2023 be better than 2022? A.D. 2022 will be remembered as the year in which: the establishment began the steady push to normalize "sex change" operations for children who have not gone through puberty; we saw an unprecedented invasion of illegal immigrants cross our southern border; the FBI was outed as a domestic terror group; fuel prices soared; inflation "slowed" to 7.1%; free speech was assaulted on a daily basis; and even more bad news I won't bore you with. You know it all too well.

But there was some good news, too. Gas prices have gone down a few cents recently, and bananas (at least in my grocery store) are at 43¢ a pound. That's only 4¢ a pound more than they were 20 years ago. Other than that, 2022 was not a great year for the average American.

The rising cost of everyday items has gotten so bad, many people have been forced to find expenses to cut. I have gotten more than a few letters and calls from subscribers recently who regret they cannot afford to renew their TBR subscription. "But it's only 15¢ a day for a TBR subscription," I say. They say, "I'm sorry. I have been subscribing for 20 years and I love the magazine and what you are doing, but I can't even pay for my medicines [or mortgage, or fuel oil for heating the house, or birthday gifts etc.]," they respond. I completely understand.

This is why other subscribers have stepped forward to help. We wish we could, but TBR, as you well know, is not a profit-making business. The Powers That Be have seen to it TBR never turns a profit, sabotaging us and other likeminded organizations by revoking credit card processing, cancelling bank accounts, rigging internet search metrics, banning books and more. We're used to it.

However, if you ever get to the point where you can no longer afford to renew your TBR subscription, just give me a call Monday thru Thursday from 9-4 Eastern time at 202-547-5586 or email me at Paul@BarnesReview.org, tell me your situation and I will get your information. I will then approach one of those generous people who has agreed to pay for as many subscription renewals he can afford for other subscribers.

On a sad note, two members of TBR's Board of Contributing Editors have passed away. The first is Margaret Huffstickler, a talented vocalist and linguist who translated many articles from the great Catalan Revisionist Joaquin Bochaca among others that have appeared in TBR. Margaret died after a long and courageous battle with cancer. She is survived by her husband—translator and historian John de Nugent. I am sad also to tell you that the great German Revisionist Udo Walendy—the elder statesman of the Revisionist movement and a pioneering researcher and publisher—passed away after seven decades of truthtelling at the age of 95. The contributions of both of these allies will be sorely missed.

The good news is that you have another edition of The Barnes Review just the turn of a page away. ❖

An Unlikely Ally in the Battle for Truth

As 2022 came to a close, those concerned with "bringing history into accord with the facts" found an unlikely ally in the form of the popular rapper, music producer, and fashion guru Ye (pronounced "yee"), formerly known as Kanye West.

Once one of the wealthiest Black Americans in the history of this country, Ye quickly found himself in the crosshairs of the well-financed and highly motivated organized grievance industry, led by the infamous Anti-Defamation League (ADL), easily one of the most subversive and well-heeled organizations operating on U.S. soil.

The controversy began in earnest in early October when Ye attended a fashion show in Paris sporting a "White Lives Matter" shirt, which drew immediate scorn and condemnation from a wide range of liberal activists, pundits and organizations. The musician then joined Tucker Carlson on his popular nightly news program for an interview, where he defended his beliefs and decision to wear the "White Lives Matter" shirt, a seemingly innocuous message that has been described as a "White supremacist" slogan by the ADL.

Shortly thereafter, Ye, in an apparent gaffe, made a highly controversial statement on his now deleted Twitter account—which had over 32 million followers prior to him being banned from the platform—vowing to "go death con three on the Jews," seemingly meaning he would expose the crimes and wrongdoings meted out to him by Jews he worked with in the past.

In the weeks that followed, Ye appeared as a guest on several alternative media programs, where he insinuated that a powerful network of Jews control, manipulate and exploit celebrities and also wield tremendous influence upon society, particularly in politics and media. He was quickly denounced as an "anti-Semite," with groups like the ADL and other Jewish businessmen and pundits calling for him to be boycotted, banned, deplatformed and punished financially.

In an interview with Lex Fridman, a popular podcast host and computer scientist of Jewish descent, Ye identified four Jews he worked with "that controlled [his voice]" before noting that "90% of Black people in entertainment—from sports to music to acting—are in some way tied into Jewish businesspeople." He went on to point out how powerful Jews like Rahm Emanuel and Jared Kushner operate similarly in politics. Emanuel, he says, guided former President Barack Obama while Kushner steered former President Donald Trump, both operating as "handlers," controlling and manipulating the direction of policy and influencing these two presidents behind the scenes. "Colonel" Edward Mandell House did the same thing for Woodrow Wilson as have other powerful Jewish "advisors" for other presidents.

"There's a Jewish person right there controlling the country," Ye said referring to individuals like Emanuel and Kushner before extrapolating that same point and applying it to Hollywood and the entertainment industry generally.

Following these controversial yet entirely legitimate and substantive comments, Ye had his bank accounts frozen and had contracts cancelled with numerous major clothing and music labels, in addition to talent agencies and lawyers. Concerts previously scheduled were cancelled as well. Seemingly overnight, Ye's estimated net worth of over $2 billion shrank immediately, as Jewish pundits, professional activists and business leaders demanded his cancellation, which was quickly obliged by virtually all of Ye's former business partners of all stripes.

Exacerbating matters, Ye appeared on the Alex Jones program in early December, where he doubled down on these taboo topics and went even further, openly disputing one of the most sacred narratives in modern Western society relating to WWII and the "Jewish Holocaust."

The admittedly bizarre appearance on Jones's hugely popular program—which is broadcast on hundreds of radio stations across the country, not to mention to millions of listeners online—totally shattered the post-WWII political narrative foundational to the current world order. During the three-hour interview, which quickly went viral online generating massive attention and commentary on all sides of the political spectrum, Ye praised Adolf Hitler and disputed the official Holocaust narrative, among other controversial statements.

"I like Hitler," Ye stated early in the interview, a comment that shocked Jones and no doubt much of the viewing audience, before noting that "Hitler has a lot of redeeming qualities. … A lot of good Nazis were just fighting for their country," he went on to declare. And, Hitler "didn't kill 6 million Jews." Alex Jones, quite predictably, condemned him in no uncertain terms.

Intellectual and historical inquiry are the bedrock of all civilization. It is the foundation of all philosophical discoveries, the cornerstone of education and the prerequisite for genuine freedom in any meaningful sense. Ye's talking points are the same ones Revisionists have been making for decades, to little avail. But now we have a very unlikely ally in our struggle for truth and justice to prevail in our world. ❖

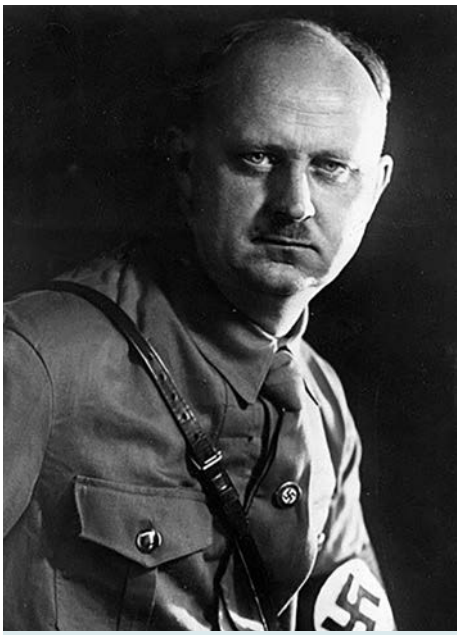
Kristallnacht: Organized Anti-Semitic Pogrom or False Flag? You Decide …

By Marc Roland

Readers of The Barnes Review are no doubt unconvinced that the official narrative of New York City's World Trade Center destruction on September 11, 2001, is correct. They largely suspect the Twin Towers were demolished instead in a false flag operation designed to usher in a "New World Order" of global chaos, political and social tyranny and state-sponsored terrorism, all of which define the times we live in today.

A "false flag" is any atrocity disguised to misidentify and conceal its true source of responsibility, pinning guilt for the outrage on some other entity or individual, making it appear to have been executed by an opponent of the actual perpetrator, thereby providing a pretext for domestic repression or foreign military aggression in the name of self-defense or "homeland security."

A pertinent example came to light during the summer of 1954 when Jews residing in Egypt were recruited by Israeli military intelligence officers to bomb civilian targets throughout the Nile Valley, killing and injuring as many Americans, Brits and Egyptians as possible. Blame for this treachery would be hung on Egyptian nationalists for the purpose of compelling British troops occupying Egypt's Suez Canal Zone to cancel their previously pledged evacuation. Their continued presence would embolden Egyptian President Gamel Abdel Nasser to launch an invasion of Israel, where a trap for his forces had been prepared.



Wilhelm Gustloff (1895-1936), a Swiss National Socialist figure, was gunned down and killed in Davos in 1936 by David Frankfurter, a Yugoslav Jew.

The Israeli plot to ignite war in the Near East was only foiled just as the murderous wave of bombings was about to commence. Cairo authorities had followed one of the Jewish conspirators to his intended victim, arrested the terrorist and searched his apartment. There, they unraveled the entire strategem, discovering the names of other agents as well as explosive materials.

Known as the Lavon Affair (after Pinhas Lavon, then Israel's minister of Defense), it was just one of numerous Israeli intrigues against the lives of their own allies, though never thereafter mentioned by international journalists who censored the story with permanent neglect. Israel characteristically denied any involvement in the bloody scheme until as late as 2005, when its intended mass-murderers were cynically awarded "certificates of appreciation" by proud Israeli President Moshe Katsav.[1] The Lavon Affair was neither the first nor last Jewish/Zionist false flag, as we will see in this article.

Known as Kristallnacht ("Crystal Night," referring to all the shards of glass from shattered store windows, or the "Night of Broken Glass"), it has since become a centerpiece of Holocaust lore. Kristallnacht refers to an event in which hundreds of Jewish synagogues, businesses and department stores were allegedly destroyed by angry crowds of Nazi stormtroopers, Hitler Youth and common citizens in various parts of Germany on November

Above, a crowd salutes Ernst vom Rath's casket as it passes through Dusseldorf, Nov. 17, 1938.

Ernst Vom Rath (pictured right) was shot at point-blank range in the spleen, stomach and pancreas. "Adolf Hitler himself sent his two best doctors, personal physician Karl Brandt and surgeon Georg Magnus, to Paris to try to save vom Rath," writes Ingrid Weckert. He lingered for three agonizing days, before succumbing to his wounds on November 9. "As the life of vom Rath, Grynszpan's victim, painfully guttered to an end," David Irving notes, "Hitler promoted him to embassy secretary, to ensure an enhanced pension for his widow." One of the most poignant moments filmed in the Third Reich was captured by newsreel coverage of a Munich memorial service, showing a downcast Hitler comforting vom Rath's grief-stricken mother, widow, son and two weeping daughters. In his eulogy, Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop referred to the shooting as an attack by Jews on the whole German people. He was right: vom Rath was, after all, an official in the German embassy in Paris.

De Moro Giafferi: Lawyer to Assassins

Vincent de Moro Giafferi, a member of the International League Against Anti-Semitism, was somehow able to proclaim himself Grynszpan's defense attorney hours before anyone else—besides the French police or officials at the German embassy—learned of the assassination. An adherent of the Marxist Radical Socialist Party, and a Radical Party deputy from 1919 to 1928, de Moro Giafferi took part in the "Rally of Left Republicans" from 1946 to 1956. He volunteered to defend, without pay, former news editor of the Communist newspaper L'Humanité Lucien Sampaix who had been charged with espionage. In February 1936, de Moro Giafferi hurried to Davos, Switzerland to defend Jewish murderer David Frankfurter, who had assassinated a leading Swiss National Socialist figure named Wilhelm Gustloff.

9-10, 1938. The official narrative claims that German rioters damaged or destroyed thousands of Jewish-owned buildings, resulting in the death of at least 90 Jews.

Reich Minister Dr. Joseph Goebbels explained that these events exploded from popular rage accumulated over the previous 20 years. Beginning immediately after the end of World War I, large-scale immigration of foreign Jews with liquid cash disenfranchised the already-impoverished German people. The uninvited newcomers controlled nearly every aspect of German culture and debauched it with unprecedented vigor and degeneracy, openly vilifying their German hosts and organizing a huge Communist movement for re-building Germany into a Soviet state, a mere stepping-stone on behalf of Vladimir Lenin's world revolution.

Adolf Hitler's 1933 election as chancellor swept the Jews out of power with an iron broom from Germany, which flourished in their absence as never before or since. World Jewry reviled the self-liberated Gentiles, menacing them first with economic strangulation, then bloodshed and war. They made good on their threat after only three years, when they murdered Wilhelm Gustloff, a Swiss National Socialist.

During the following 20 months, their fanatical incitement to violence grew in volume and frequency. German restraint and self-discipline held firm until human endurance broke on the Third Reich's most important commemoration, honoring the 16 men who gave their lives for Germany's revival, 10 years before it transpired. On that day of all days—the 15th anniversary of the attempted putsch in Munich in 1923 led by Hitler—Ernst vom Rath, a secretary of the German embassy in Paris, died of gunshot wounds inflicted on him by a Jewish terrorist.

Righteous anger subsequently directed against all things Jewish in Germany was and still is condemned from the self-satisfying moral high ground of the outside world. But by way of comparison, how would Americans react today if a secretary in a U.S. embassy was gunned down by a Russian supporter of Vladimir Putin on July 4, Independence Day, while shouting "You filthy Gringo!"?[2] Would they be likely to coolly regard such a deliberate affront with indifference or disinterest? Would television newscasters caution moderation? One can only imagine.

But Dr. Goebbels's explanation for the "Night of Broken Glass" was not the whole story. Following WWII, the Jewish version of the event is all the world ever hears. The only strictly historical study of Kristallnacht is out of print. With limited distribution, its original German-language publication, Feuerzeichen, was released in 1981, followed 10 years later by an English translation, Flashpoint, by Munich librarian Ingrid Weckert.[3]

"Like a medal," she explained, "Crystal Night has two sides. One side lies in the shining glare of historical research, while the other remains in the shadows. Until now, no one (at least as far as I know) has examined the hidden side."

Weckert went on to note that, during her research into this topic, she "found many facts which do not agree with the generally accepted thesis."

"On the contrary," she notes, "the evidence which I have found gives a completely different picture."

After her book appeared in print, Weckert's doctoral credentials were revoked by the German state, not because she published false information, but because the postwar law imposed by the Allied occupation authorities forbids making defamatory statements against the Jewish people. As demonstrated by the trial of David Irving and others, the truth about WWII is irrelevant. All that concerns post-WWII Germany and Austria is protecting Jews from "defamation."[4]

"In February 1939," Weckert wrote, "Chief Judge of the Supreme Party Court Walter Buch reported his findings to Hermann Goering. From an examination of the Buch report, as well as many documents from some of the thousands of trials of so-called Nazi criminals held after the war, and corroborating testimony by thousands of defendants and witnesses, I have been able to gain a detailed and accurate understanding of what actually happened during those fateful days and nights of November 1938."

In that year, there were "approximately 1,400 synagogues in Germany, of which only about 180 were destroyed or damaged," Weckert argues, challenging conventional estimates ranging from 276 torn down and vandalized to all 1,400 lost.

Based on these inflated and unsubstantiated claims, "President of the World Jewish Congress Nahum Goldmann had the chutzpah in 1952 to claim $500 million from German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, as reparation payment for the damage done during that November night."

Weckert continues:

> When Adenauer asked Goldmann for his justification for this enormous request, Goldmann replied: "You find the justification yourself! What I want is not the justification, but the money." And he got his money!
> Goldmann may have interpreted the willingness of the German chancellor to pay a half billion dollars as proof for the claim that all synagogues had been destroyed. Why else would Germany be so foolish as to pay for something that never happened?[5]

More than 1 billion reichsmarks in property damage (roughly $7 billion today) were alleged by Holocaust writer Alan E. Steinweis relating to Kristallnacht alone.[6]

"All the same, the 'historical truth' that 'all' German synagogues were destroyed is a lie," Weckert writes. "Furthermore, Jews owned approximately 100,000 shops and department stores in Germany in 1938. Of this number, only about 7,500 had their windows broken. These figures show just how much the so-called 'historical truth' differs from what actually happened."

Famous newspaper photograph of the impoverished Herschel Grynszpan incongruously attired in a "designer raincoat" immediately after his arrest for the murder of Ernst vom Rath.

That alternate reality debunks the Night of Broken Glass as Hitler's preordained atrocity looking for the right opportunity. "The Nazi government had been planning violence against the Jews for some time," the official line runs in Wikipedia, "and was waiting for a suitable pretext."[7] The German embassy official's murder was only an excuse to vent groundless prejudice and economic envy on God's so-called "chosen people."

"It is generally accepted, especially by contemporary historians, that the Nazi gang organized and carried out the pogrom," writes historian Martin Gilbert, reflecting the official mainstream narrative of events.[8]

Friedrich Grimm

After Friedrich Grimm examined secret French police documents about Herschel Grynszpan and read the text of the assassin's interrogation conducted six years later by Adolf Eichmann, the University of Münster professor concluded that Ernst vom Rath's assassination had been organized and financed by operatives at the International League Against Anti-Semitism in Paris.

Typical is Kristallnacht: The Nazi Terror That Began the Holocaust, which tells how Third Reich leaders whipped up anti-Semitic mobs with fiery speeches as the entire German press inflamed public opinion to violence.[9]

Weckert tells how "Julius Streicher, the so-called 'No. 1 Jew baiter'[10] for example, was shocked when he first learned about the demonstrations and destruction the next morning." If any National Socialist had a hand in Crystal Night, that man would have been Streicher. But he was never cited as a major player or orchestrator in the events—by even his worst enemies.

Dr. Goebbels was instead suspected as the leading culprit, though his behavior at the time implied otherwise. After the close of an evening dinner with veterans of the Munich putsch, he "stood up and spoke briefly about the latest news," according to Weckert.

She continues:

> [Goebbels] informed the audience that vom Rath had died and that, as a result, anti-Jewish demonstrations had spontaneously broken out in two or three places. Goebbels was renowned for his passionate and inspiring speeches. But what he gave that evening was not a speech at all, but only a short and very informal announcement.
> He pointed out that the times were over when Jews could kill Germans without being punished. Legal measures would now be taken. Nevertheless, the death of vom Rath should not be an excuse for private actions against Jews.
> He suggested that the gauleiters and the head of the SA [Sturm Abteilungen, or "Stormtroops"], Viktor Lutze, should contact their home offices to make sure that peace and order were being maintained. It's very important to understand that Dr. Goebbels had no authority to give any orders to the others present. As fellow gauleiters they were colleagues of equal rank. Anyway, what he said was apparently considered so reasonable that the others agreed and did what he suggested. …
> Lutze ordered that under no circumstances could SA men take part in any demonstrations against Jews, and that furthermore the SA was to intervene to stop any demonstrations already in progress. As a result of these strict orders, SA men began to guard Jewish stores that very night wherever windows had been broken. …
> The SS and the police were given similar orders to restore peace and order. Himmler [head of the SS] ordered Reinhard Heydrich [SD, or security chief] to prevent all destruction of property and to protect Jews against demonstrators. The telex communication of this order still exists. It is in the files of the International Military Tribunal in Nuremberg.[11]

Irving adds that the German police "were to take care of safeguarding Jewish property and the protection of the Jews." Irving relates that the "gauleiter of Schleswig-Holstein, Hinrich Lohse, telephoned his chief of staff in Kiel: 'A Jew has fired a shot. A German diplomat is dead. There is to be no plundering. There's to be no manhandling, either. Foreign Jews are not to be molested.'"[12]

Steinweis writes of "Hitler's green light for Kristallnacht," depicting him as the mainspring for the Night of Broken Glass.

"'What's going on?'" rasped Hitler. 'Find out! I have to know,'" Steinweis explains in his narrative, quoting the German leader. "With rising anger, as [the head of Munich's police department] Maj. von Below described to us, Hitler shouted: 'I demand that order be restored at once!' He sent Julius Schaub [his chief aide and adjutant] out to stop the looting and ordered special protection to Bernheimer's, the famous antique dealers."[13]

According to Weckert, "It was only after [Hitler] returned to his apartment about one o'clock in the morning [of November 10] that he learned about the demonstrations, which had been taking place in Munich, during which one synagogue had been set on fire."

At Hitler's explicit command, his Stormtroopers rescued books from Jewish libraries, homes and synagogues imperiled by vandalism on November 9, 1938.

Weckert continues:

> He was furious and immediately ordered the police chief of Munich to come see him. Hitler told him to immediately stop the fire and to make sure that no other outrages took place in Munich. He then called various police and party officials throughout the Reich to learn the extent of these demonstrations. Finally he ordered a telex message sent to all gauleiter offices. It read: "By express order from the very highest authority, arson against Jewish businesses or other property must in no case and under no circumstances take place."[14]

Pursuant to the latest orders, any acts whatsoever of arson were to be prevented, in conformity with political leaders. All sub-offices were to acknowledge to Hitler's teleprinter in Munich receipt of this telex.

Later that same morning, when Goebbels first learned about the extent of the damage and destruction of the previous night, he was furious and shocked at the stupidity of those who had participated. Goebbels announced in a radio broadcast later that same morning that any action against Jews was strictly prohibited.

"At half-hour intervals throughout the day, the radio transmitted orders for the mayhem to stop," Irving reports. "Fritz Wiedemann, one of the older adjutants, saw Goebbels on the phone frantically trying to halt the conflagration."[15] Weckert explains how Goebbels "warned that severe penalties would be imposed on anyone who did not obey this order."[16]

Goebbels was not bluffing. Weckert's research found that "individual SA men who had participated directly in the pogrom and been accused in German courts of murder, assault, looting or other criminal acts by Jewish or German witnesses to these crimes" were themselves arrested.

As Weckert explains:

> But before any of these cases ever actually came to trial, Hitler issued a special decree ordering the postponement of all such cases until after the accused individuals were first prosecuted by the Supreme Party Court, an internal court concerned with discipline within the National Socialist Party organization. The most severe punishment that the Court could impose was expulsion from the Party. In this way, the Party hoped to remove any guilty members from its own ranks before they appeared as defendants in the criminal courts.

By so doing, Hitler made examples of these undisciplined men, and distanced them from all other National Socialists. Neither his actions to halt the violence nor those of his closest associates in stopping Crystal Night excesses were ever mentioned by the foreign press, which continued to heap blame on him, his followers and, in fact, the whole German people for not overthrowing their Nazi overlords.

But, if Hitler, Goebbels, Streicher and other top National Socialist leaders did not instigate Kristallnacht, then who was responsible? Was it really nothing more than impulsive mob action, as publicly stated?

"Goebbels did not really believe this story himself," Weckert points out. "To several persons he expressed his suspicion that a secret organization must have instigated the entire affair. He simply could not believe that anything so well organized could have been a spontaneous popular outburst." His suspicions in part arose from the inexplicable communications chaos that rippled throughout Germany, beginning November 8.

"It is not easy to untangle the jumble of signals flashing across the country that night," Irving confesses from his own research experience. "In none of them is Hitler or Himmler seen encouraging any pogrom … as a babel of conflicting orders and reports tumbled to and fro by radio, telephone and teleprinter, typed, retyped, encoded, and copied to lesser units, held up by system delays, and then found to be at variance with later and conflicting orders arriving faster by different channels or from other authorities."

The confusion was deliberate, as Weckert discovered:

> Several district and local Party leaders (Kreisleiters and Ortsgruppenleiters) were awakened from their sleep in the middle of the night by telephone calls. Someone claiming to be from the regional party headquarters or the regional party propaganda bureau (Gauleitung or Gaupropagandaleitung) would ask what was happening in the official's town or city.
> If the party official answered, "Nothing, everything is quiet," the telephone caller would then say in German slang that he had received an order to the effect that the Jews were going to get it tonight and that the respective official should carry out the order. In most cases the party leader, disturbed from his sleep, did not even understand what had happened. Some simply dismissed the call as a joke and went back to bed.
> Others called back the office from where the telephone voice had pretended to be calling. If they managed to reach someone in charge, they were often told that nobody knew anything about such a call. But if they reached only a lower official they were often told: "Well, if you got that order, you'd better go ahead and do what you were told." These telephone calls caused considerable confusion.

They were not Jew-hating SA men, enraged over the murder of a German diplomat.

The behavior of the rioters themselves also attracted suspicion:

> Groups of generally five or six young men, armed with crowbars and clubs, went down the streets smashing store windows. They were not Jew-hating SA men, enraged over the murder of a German diplomat. They operated too methodically to have been motivated by anger. They carried out their work without any apparent emotion. Nonetheless, it was their destruction that encouraged certain other individuals from the lowest social classes to become a mob and continue the destruction. …
> In fact, as already shown, there was no order to commit arson or carry out destruction against any Jewish property from the Gruppenführer in Munich, but only from the telephone guard. Who he was remains a mystery. During the postwar trials against members of this SA unit, none of the judges asked for the name or identity of this telephone guard. This mysterious man was very probably an agent for those who were actually behind the entire Crystal Night Affair. …
> Based on all of the available evidence, these demonstrations were neither thought up nor organized by German [National Socialist] Party or government officials. In fact, they were completely surprised and shocked when they learned of the riot and destruction. The pogrom must have been thought up and organized by those who actually benefited from it and who wanted to create havoc in Germany.

Their triggerman, a 17-year-old German-born Polish Jew named Herschel Grynszpan who was then living in Paris, was predictably lionized in the world press, which portrayed him as "a poor Jewish boy who had been driven to despair by the injustice done to his family [in the Reich], and who, in his deep depression, shot the young German diplomat."[17] As a junior functionary in Germany's French embassy, vom Rath was never in a position to have harmed anyone. Personally, he "expressed regret that German Jews had to suffer but argued that anti-Semitic laws were 'necessary' to allow the Volksgemeinschaft ["racial community"] 'to flourish'."[18]

Common textbook explanations insist that "Grynszpan shot the German diplomat Ernst vom Rath in retaliation to what they had done to his family."[19] But all that had happened to his mother, father and three sisters was their deportation from the Third Reich. If life for Jews was so horrible under the Hitler regime, one would imagine he did them a favor by removing them to Poland.

In reality, Grynszpan did not leave home to avenge his family against the Nazis, but to sponge off his uncle in Following Hitler's direct orders, a German fireman—after extinguishing the flames that threatened a Munich synagogue—rescued valuable Jewish property for its owners.

Paris by entering France "illegally in September 1936," as Steinweis explains. "He initially lived a carefree, bohemian life there as a 'poet of the streets,' spending his days aimlessly wandering and reciting Yiddish poems to himself. Grynszpan's two greatest interests, other than exploring Paris, were spending time in coffeehouses and going to the movies."

Steinweis continues:

> The Paris Police Prefecture ruled in July 1937 that he had no basis for remaining in France. Because his Polish passport had expired, the French government refused to renew his residence permit, and he was ordered to leave the following month. Grynszpan nonetheless continued to live illegally in Paris.
> Lonely and living in poverty on the margins of French life as an illegal immigrant, he depended for support on his uncle Abraham, who was also extremely poor. His refusal to work caused tension with his uncle and aunt, who frequently told him that he was a drain on their finances and had to take a job. Beginning in October 1938 [a month before he murdered vom Rath], Grynszpan was in hiding from the French police, who sought to deport him.[20]

In the two years leading up to the moment of that homicide, his only concern had been continued room and board at the expense of his imposed-upon relatives.

Magically transformed on the morning of November 7, wearing a new designer raincoat, Grynszpan strode from his freshly changed residence at the four-star Hôtel de Suez in the fashionable Rue de Strasburg. Arriving at a Rue du Faubourg St. Martin gun shop, he paid 235 francs cash (the equivalent of $175 U.S. dollars today) for a 6.35-mm revolver, plus a box of 25 bullets.

"Although he had no apparent means of support or even valid identity papers between February and November 1938, Grynszpan was nevertheless able to purchase [the firearm]," Irving observes, before noting that "the [Paris] police concluded that somebody had groomed him for this job, but how had he got the money?"

Weapon in pocket, Grynszpan caught the metro to the Solférino Station, walking the rest of the way to 78 Rue de Lille. Entering the German embassy at 9:35 a.m., Grynszpan asked at the reception desk if he could see the ambassador in order to hand over a "most important document." The clerk on duty asked Ernst vom Rath, the junior of the two embassy officials

These metal plates were installed by the fraudulent "German" government as public sympathy propaganda in the city of Hanover. They memorialize the assassination of an innocent German by his Jewish murderer. The plaque at right reads, "Here dwelt Herschel Grynszpan, born 1921. Fled to France in 1936. Delivered [i.e., "removed"] 1940. [Resided] 1943 to 1945 in a concentration camp." Three question marks follow, indicating his unknown postwar fate, though observers assume he died in the concentration camp mentioned in the inscription. The adjacent plate states, "Here dwelt Ester Grynszpan [Herschel's elder sister], born 1916. Deported the 28th of October 1938 to Poland," followed by three more question marks, again implying she was a "Holocaust" victim. In fact, Ester Grynszpan was murdered in the Soviet Union.

available, to see him.

When Grynszpan stepped into his office, "Rath politely regretted that His Excellency was unavailable," Irving explains. "The Jewish youth rewarded the defenseless diplomat with five bullets from the expensive handgun, pumped into his stomach."[21] Grynszpan was immediately arrested and confined in a Paris jail.

Weckert describes what happened next:

> Although he was a totally obscure Polish Jew with no money and no apparent supporters, nevertheless one of France's most famous lawyers, Moro Giafferi [a leading Marxist and anti-Fascist activist], appeared at the police station a few hours after the shooting and told the police that he was Grynszpan's attorney.
> Nothing could possibly have appeared about the shooting in any newspaper before his arrival. How then could Moro Giafferi have possibly known about the shooting?

Vincent de Moro Giafferi was a member of the International League Against Anti-Semitism (ILAA)—an important and influential Jewish organization, a French version of America's Anti-Defamation League of B'nai Brith. Conveniently, the ILAA's Paris office was just around the corner from Grynszpan's rooms at the posh Hôtel de Suez.

Before his case could come before a French court, war broke out, and, after France fell, the assassin was extradited to Germany on July 18, 1940 to Berlin's Moabit prison. Later transferred to Sachsenhausen concentration camp and housed in a bunker reserved for "special prisoners," he "received relatively mild treatment."[22]

Adolf Eichmann examined him during early 1944 at Gestapo headquarters in Berlin to learn more about his handlers of six years before. Eichmann passed on the results of the interrogation to a professor of International Law at the University of Münster and a prominent German attorney representing the bereaved vom Rath family.

Eichmann's information, combined with corroborative files seized from Giafferi's Paris offices, convinced Friedrich Grimm (as were the French police before him, back in 1938) that Grynszpan had been funded and instructed by the International League Against Anti-Semitism to originally murder Johannes von Welczeck. Unable to find the German ambassador, Grynszpan settled for killing his assistant. The text of Eichmann's firsthand report and Giafferi's secret files vanished after World War II.

Strangely, despite several attempts, even by persons in authority, such as Friedrich Grimm and even Goebbels, Grynszpan was never brought to trial in National Socialist Germany. For whatever reason, it appears he had no one other than Adolf Hitler to thank for having escaped prosecution.

His family also escaped, leaving Poland before that country was invaded by Germany in September 1939, crossing over the Russian border into the Soviet Union, where the Grynszpans spent World War II. After the conclusion of hostilities, they migrated once again, this time to Palestine, the future Israel.

"Amazingly enough," Weckert

Ernst vom Rath's unpunished murderer, Herschel Grynszpan, photographed in Bavaria, 76 years ago, 14 months after the close of World War II in Europe.

writes, "this took place at a time when immigration to Palestine was limited to persons who possessed at least 1,000 English pounds in cash. Grynszpan's father, a poor piece-work tailor, certainly never had a fortune of 4,000 English pounds. How did they ever raise the 4,000 English pounds only a short time later for their migration to Palestine?"

Irving provides more details of the Grynszpans' mysterious behavior: "With brazen c*hutzpah* in the circumstances, in 1958, they asked a Hanover court to declare [their son, Herschel] dead, so they could claim financial compensation from Bonn. The court granted a certificate of presumed death on June 1, 1960." Herschel's father Sendel Grynszpan, his wife and daughters knew otherwise, but cashed in on postwar Germany's guilt-obsessed atmosphere.

Long after they themselves had died of old age, the truth accidentally emerged in December 2016 when a startling image was found among uncatalogued photographs in the archives of Vienna's Jewish Museum.

Taken at a displaced persons camp in Bamberg, Bavaria on July 3, 1946, the black-and-white shot clearly shows a man resembling the legally dead Grynszpan participating in a demonstration supporting unrestricted Jewish emigration to the British mandate of Palestine. Facial recognition tests indicated a 95% probability, the highest possible score, that the man in the photo was, in fact, Herschel Grynszpan.[23]

The demonstration in which he was photographed proved successful, with the Jewish protesters allowed to settle in a soon-to-be Israel, where he almost certainly rejoined his family under an assumed name and lived out the rest of his ill-famed existence in protective anonymity.

The notorious murder he committed with impunity was the planned spark that ignited a false-flag terror campaign on November 9, 1938. It hypocritically fanned the flames of international hatred against Hitler's Germany that expanded into World War II less than one year later.[24] ❖

Court Historians claim that hundreds of thousands of Hungarian Jews were systematically murdered at Auschwitz, one of the most iconic "death camps" operating in Nazi Germany. But is the claim true?

By John Wear, J.D.

American historian Randolph L. Braham wrote, on March 19, 1944, without any resistance, Germany occupied Hungary primarily based on military-strategic considerations. Hungary at this time was a member of the Axis alliance and had a Jewish population of approximately 800,000. Braham wrote that, from May 15 through July 9, 1944, approximately 440,000 Jews were deported from Hungary, with more than 420,000 Jews sent to Auschwitz-Birkenau. He claimed that most of the Hungarian Jews sent to Auschwitz-Birkenau were murdered immediately upon arrival.[1]

British historian David Cesarani wrote that, in the unremittingly grim record of the Holocaust, no single chapter is quite so awful as the fate that befell Hungary's Jewish population. He said, with the full cooperation of the local administration, the Eichmann Kommando quickly set about plundering and deporting Hungary's Jewish population. Cesarani estimated that 437,000 Jews were sent to Auschwitz-Birkenau. He wrote that only a fraction of these Jews was selected for work and, of them, only a few thousand survived.[2]

Historian Randolph Braham says that most of the Hungarian Jews sent to Auschwitz-Birkenau were murdered upon arrival. The physical evidence does not support that claim.

This article documents that, contrary to the statements of most historians, the Hungarian Jews were not subject to a program of mass extermination at Auschwitz-Birkenau.

NO HOMICIDAL GAS CHAMBERS

The official number of Hungarian Jews allegedly exterminated at Auschwitz-Birkenau is impossible because there were no homicidal gas chambers there. The first scientific study of the alleged German homicidal gas chambers was made by the American gas chamber expert Fred Leuchter in his Leuchter Report. Leuchter concludes in his report that the alleged homicidal gas chambers at Auschwitz-Birkenau and Majdanek were structurally unsuitable for gassing.[3]

Leuchter also researched the chemical properties of the Zyklon B fumigant. Leuchter found that Zyklon B is a highly toxic compound that releases deadly hydrogen cyanide gas. The released hydrogen cyanide gas clings to surfaces and reacts chemically with materials containing iron, forming ferrocyanide compounds that have a distinctive blue color called Prussian Blue. Since building materials normally contain a certain amount of rust (iron oxide, usually between 1% and 4%), repeated exposure to hydrogen cyanide gas would result in Prussian Blue staining on the walls of the alleged homicidal gas chambers.[4]

Leuchter took forensic samples

Hundreds of thousands of Hungarian Jews, such as the ones shown above, were deported to the Auschwitz-Birkenau concentration camp. The sprawling camp complex included industrial and chemical facilities where many inmates worked for the German war effort. Claims of mass gassings of Jews are not backed by any legitimate forensic evidence.

from the alleged homicidal gas chambers at the visited sites and a control sample from the delousing facility at Birkenau. The samples were analyzed by an independent laboratory in the United States. The laboratory found no significant ferrocyanide compound traces in the samples taken from the chambers tested, but the sample from a wall of the Birkenau delousing facility had heavy concentrations of ferrocyanide compounds.

Leuchter concludes that this result would be impossible if the alleged homicidal gas chambers had been repeatedly exposed to hydrogen cyanide gas.[5]

Germar Rudolf, a certified chemist, expanded on Leuchter's work by writing the Rudolf Report in the spring of 1992. The Rudolf Report, which has since been updated and revised several times, focuses on engineering and chemical aspects of the alleged homicidal gas chambers at Auschwitz-Birkenau. Rudolf observed in his on-site examinations that all of the delousing facilities at Auschwitz, Birkenau, Stutthof and Majdanek have one thing in common: their walls are permeated with Prussian Blue. Not only the inner surfaces, but also the outside walls and the mortar between the bricks of the delousing facilities all have Prussian Blue staining. Nothing of this sort can be observed in any of the alleged homicidal gas chambers at Auschwitz-Birkenau.

Rudolf also took samples from the alleged homicidal gas chambers and the delousing facilities at Auschwitz-Birkenau. Similar to Leuchter's samples, the chambers exhibit only insignificant traces of ferrocyanide residue on the same order of magnitude found in any other building. The samples from the delousing chambers, however, all showed very high ferrocyanide residues.

Rudolf determined that, if mass execution gassings with hydrocyanic acid had taken place in the alleged homicidal gas chambers, the rooms in those chambers would exhibit similar ferrocyanide residue as the delousing chambers. Therefore, Rudolf concludes that mass gassings with Zyklon B did not occur in the alleged homicidal gas chambers at Auschwitz-Birkenau.[6]

Chemists adhering to the orthodox Holocaust narrative have failed to explain why the walls of the delousing facilities at Auschwitz-Birkenau are permeated with Prussian Blue, while nothing of this sort can be observed in any of the alleged homicidal gas chambers. The only reasonable explanation is that Zyklon B was never used in the alleged homicidal gas chambers at Auschwitz-Birkenau. As Revisionist Nicholas Kollerstrom writes, "For any alleged human gas chamber found in a German World War II labor camp, let us merely measure cyanide in the walls. If it's not there, it didn't happen."[7]

The alleged homicidal gas chambers at Auschwitz-Birkenau could not have been used to exterminate hundreds of thousands of people as described in pro-Holocaust literature for numerous reasons:

- They did not have escape-proof doors and windows.
- They did not have panic-proof equipment.
- They did not have technically gas-tight doors and shutters.
- They had no provision to quickly release and distribute the poison gas.
- They had no effective device to ventilate or otherwise render ineffective the poison gas after the execution.[8]

By contrast, Germany built highly sophisticated and expensive disinfestation facilities at Auschwitz-Birkenau to kill lice and save inmate lives. By one estimate, the SS at Auschwitz spent almost $1 billion in today's values to bring the typhus epidemics raging there under control.[9]

An enormous amount of information exists concerning the German delousing facilities[10], but no similar information exists regarding the alleged homicidal gas chambers at Auschwitz-Birkenau.[11]

The roof of the semi-underground Morgue No. 1 of Crematorium II at Birkenau, which is said to have been the building's homicidal gas chamber, remains intact to some degree today. Contrary to the testimony of some eyewitnesses, this roof has no Zyklon-B introduction holes. This has been acknowledged by pro-Holocaust researcher Robert Jan van Pelt. Since it is impossible to close holes measuring 27.6 x 27.6 inches from a concrete roof without leaving clearly visible traces, it is certain that Zyklon-B introduction holes never existed at Crematorium II. Consequently, Zyklon B could not have been introduced through the roof at this morgue, and Crematorium II was never used as a homicidal gas chamber as claimed by pro-Holocaust historians.[12]

> The gas chambers at Auschwitz-Birkenau could not have been used to execute huge numbers of people.

CREMATORIA CAPACITY

Another factor making impossible the official number of Hungarian Jews dying at Auschwitz-Birkenau is the fact that thousands of corpses could not have been cremated every day at Auschwitz-Birkenau as is commonly claimed. Ivan Lagacé, manager of a large crematory in Calgary, Canada, testified at the 1988 Ernst Zündel trial that, based on his experience, it would have only been possible to cremate a maximum of 184 bodies a day at Birkenau. Lagacé stated that the claim that the 46 retorts at Birkenau could cremate over 4,400 bodies in a day was "ludicrous," "preposterous" and "beyond the realm of reality."[13]

Carlo Mattogno, with the assistance of Italian engineer Dr. Ing. Franco Deana, has performed additional research to show that more than 184 bodies a day could have been cremated at Birkenau. Kurt Prüfer and Karl Schultze, engineers who worked for a German firm called Topf that designed and built crematorium used at Auschwitz-Birkenau, testified that it took about 60 minutes to cremate a single body in the furnaces at Birkenau during their interrogations after the war by the Soviet counter-espionage agency Smersh. During his interrogation on March 4, 1946, Karl Schultze stated:

> Five furnaces were located in the two crematoria, and three corpses were introduced in each furnace [one in each muffle], i.e., there were three openings (muffles) in each furnace. In one crematorium with five furnaces [and 15 muffles], one could incinerate 15 corpses in one hour.[14]

During his interrogation on March 5, 1946, Kurt Prüfer explained why the cremations lasted so long in the Birkenau crematoria:

> In civilian crematoria, pre-heated air is blown in with the help of special bellows, due to which the corpse burns faster and without smoke. The construction of the crematoria for the concentration camps is different; it was not possible to preheat the air, as a result of which the corpse burned slower and with smoke developing. In order to reduce the smoke and the smell of a burning corpse, a fan is used.
> Question: How many corpses would be cremated per hour in a crematorium in Auschwitz? Answer: In a crematorium that had five furnaces and 15 muffles, one cremated 15 corpses in an hour.[15]

Thus, German engineers confirmed that the cremation furnaces at Auschwitz-Birkenau could incinerate one corpse per hour and muffle. Given the capacity of one body per hour and 20 hours of operation per day, the theoretical daily maximum capacity of the Topf cremation furnaces at Auschwitz-Birkenau was 1,040 bodies (52 muffles times 20 hours of Hungarian Jews march down Wesselenyi Street in the heart of Budapest's Jewish Quarter, on their way to be deported to Auschwitz. Were they all executed immediately upon arrival at German camps?

operation per day).[16]

Mattogno, however, writes that, according to a German memorandum dated March 17, 1943, the normal activity of the crematoria was only 12 hours per day, of which the first hour was likely needed to bring the furnaces back to operational temperature. This means that only 11 hours per day were available for actual cremations. Thus, the actual theoretical daily maximum capacity of the Topf cremation furnaces at Auschwitz-Birkenau was 52 muffles times 11 hours of operation per day equaling 572 bodies.[17]

Supporters of the official Holocaust story sometimes use a letter dated June 28, 1943, under the name of SS-Sturmbannführer Bischoff, the Chief of the Auschwitz Central Construction Office, to prove a higher cremation capacity at Auschwitz-Birkenau. This letter, which was intended to be sent to SS-Brigadeführer Kammler, the Chief of the Economic-Administrative Main Office's Office Group C, concludes that 4,756 bodies per day could have been cremated at Auschwitz-Birkenau.[18]

However, even pro-Holocaust researcher Jean-Claude Pressac does not give Bischoff's letter any credibility. In his book Auschwitz: Technique and Operation of the Gas Chambers, Pressac says that the real cremation capacity at Auschwitz-Birkenau was a much lower figure. Pressac writes that this "official" figure "had no basis in practice, and probably has to be divided by two or three to arrive at the true figure."[19]

The authors of the book The Holocaust in Hungary: Evolution of a Genocide write that at least 300,000 to 345,000 Hungarian Jews were murdered in the gas chambers upon arrival at Birkenau.[20] The cremation capacity at Birkenau was not nearly enough to cremate this many Jews so quickly. The authors of The Holocaust in Hungary acknowledge this fact and write: "The Nazis' main problem: they were killing more people in the gas chambers than they could burn in the furnaces. The crematoria simply could not keep up with the task." Thus, the Germans decided to burn many dead Hungarian Jews in open pits.[21]

However, as we will see in the next section, aerial photographs taken during the height of the alleged extermination of the Hungarian Jews at Birkenau show an uneventful camp without smoke emanating from the crematoria or from open pits.

PHOTOGRAPHIC EVIDENCE

The photographic evidence indicates that Germany did not have an extermination program against the Hungarian Jews. The U.S. government released wartime aerial photographs in 1979 of the Auschwitz-Birkenau camp taken on several random days in 1944 during the height of the alleged Sixth edition. By John Ball, Edited by Germar Rudolf. During World War II, both German and Allied reconnaissance aircraft took countless air photos of places of tactical and strategic interest in Europe. These photos are prime evidence for the investigation of the Holocaust. Air photos of locations like Auschwitz, Majdanek, Treblinka and Babi Yar permit an insight into what did or did not happen there. This then can be compared with what witnesses claim happened there. The present book is full of air photo reproductions and schematic drawings explaining them. According to the author, these images refute many of the atrocity claims made by witnesses in connection with events in the German sphere of influence.

extermination period. Many of these photographs were taken at mid-morning on typical workdays. None of these photos shows huge pits or piles of bodies, smoking crematory chimneys, masses of Jews awaiting death outside of the alleged gas chambers, or mountains of coke used to fuel the crematoria. All of these would have been visible if Auschwitz-Birkenau had been the extermination center it is said to have been.

In his book Auschwitz: The End of a Legend, Mattogno writes in regard to the Allied aerial photographs taken at Birkenau on May 31, 1944:

> It is pointed out also that the aerial photographs taken by the Allied military on May 31, 1944, at the crucial time of presumed extermination, on the day of the arrival at Birkenau of about 15,000 deportees, and after 14 days of intense arrivals (184,000 deportees, averaging 13,000 per day) and with an extermination toll (according to Pressac's hypothesis) of at least 110,000 homicidally gassed, which would have had to average 7,800 per day, every single day for 14 consecutive days; after all of that, the photographs do not show the slightest evidence of this alleged enormous extermination:
> No trace of smoke, no trace of pits, crematory or otherwise, burning or not, no sign of dirt extracted from pits, no trace of wood set aside for use in pits, no sign of vehicles or any other type of activity in the crucial zones of the courtyard of Crematory V nor in the earth of Bunker 2, nor in Crematories II and III. These photographs constitute irrefutable proof that the story of extermination of the Hungarian Jews is historically unfounded.[22]

John C. Ball writes that the Hungarian Jews arriving at Auschwitz-Birkenau from May 28 through May 31, 1944 are said to have been killed on the spot and cremated. Since the crematories at Auschwitz-Birkenau could have cremated only a small fraction of these bodies, by necessity most of them would have been cremated on gargantuan pyres outdoors. Therefore, if the orthodox story was true, the area would have been blanketed in smoke. However, the Allied air photo of Birkenau on May 31, 1944 shows a peaceful and uneventful camp devoid of any smoke emanating from the crematoria or open pits.[23]

Ball concludes:

> The air photos of Auschwitz-Birkenau known to date from the period of December 1943 to February 1945 show no signs of fuel depots, massive smoke from chimneys or open fires, burning pits or pyres. The photos were altered: fake Zyklon-B input shafts and groups of inmates were retouched onto the photo negatives. One must assume that any actual mass-murder activities would not have escaped the notice of the air-photo interpreters, which would have resulted in the bombing of the camp—but this did not happen. … To this day there is no air-photo evidence to support the alleged mass murder of the Jews at any location in Europe occupied by the Germans during World War II.[24]

CONCLUSION

The Hungarian Jews were not subject to a program of mass extermination at Auschwitz-Birkenau. No homicidal gas chambers existed at Auschwitz-Birkenau to carry out such a massive extermination process. The crematoria capacity at Auschwitz-Birkenau was also not sufficient to cremate the alleged dead Hungarian Jews in the time period claimed by Holocaust historians. Finally, Allied aerial photographs taken at the height of the alleged extermination of the Hungarian Jews at Birkenau show an uneventful camp devoid of any evidence of a mass extermination program.

Historian Randolph Braham wrote, "History is a formidable weapon that has been exploited by extremists, including chauvinistic nationalists, to justify their claims and aspirations at the expense of historical truth."[25]

In this author's opinion, however, it is Zionist/Jewish historians and organizations who have weaponized the so-called "Holocaust" at the expense of historical truth. The "Holocaust" has been used to justify the Allied war effort, to establish the state of Israel, to justify Israel's violence against its neighbors, to induce guilt in both Germans and the Allied nations, to cover up and ignore Allied crimes against Germans, to allow Jewish groups to receive massive reparations from Germany, and to create solidarity in the Jewish community.

The extreme importance of the Holocaust story in advancing Zionist/Jewish interests ensures that this falsification of history will continue in the future.[26] ❖

Vincent Reynouard Captured and Imprisoned in Scotland; France Demands Extradition

Peaceful French historian hunted down and jailed by global thought police

By Jérôme Bourbon

This time, [Vincent Reynouard] failed to escape them. While, on October 25, 2021, he had been able to slip through the fingers of the British police who came to arrest him at his modest home in Greater London by speeding out of the back of the building, running hastily like Forrest Gump and thus deceiving the vigilance of the two inspectors, unfortunately it was not the same on Thursday, November 10, when he was captured at five o'clock in the back of his lodgings in Scotland.[1]

On that morning, in the small bed and breakfast he rented under a false identity, for 11 months, paying in cash, he was arrested. This was in the vicinity of Anstruther, a charming little fishing port located on the east coast of Scotland, an hour and a half north of Edinburgh, a few miles from the very pretty town of Saint Andrews.

After wandering for several weeks, changing hiding places, sleeping in dirty and squalid places, sometimes threatened by an underworld fauna,

The waterfront village of Anstruther, Scotland, the town near which Reynouard had made his home and was recently arrested.

Vincent Reynouard, deprived of almost all his books and documents, as well as his personal belongings, had finally managed to find this bed and breakfast in mid-December 2021 by reading an ad. This tireless worker spent his days and a large part of his nights (he sleeps an average of four hours a day), after cycling very early every morning to the North Sea, close to about six miles from where he had temporarily found refuge, writing an updated and heavily completed book on the tragedy of Oradour-sur-Glane, which occurred on June 10, 1944.

Ironically, when he was arrested on October 25, 2021, he was finalizing a pamphlet on the case. This time, he had just finished and sent to print a book of nearly 500 pages on Oradour, a book where, he said, there would be not only deepening but explosive revelations. This book should in principle be available in a few weeks, unless there is a new twist.

Vincent knew that, sooner or later he would be captured, so he decided to double down. He had undertaken, in parallel with the book on Oradour, to write a book relating the entire history of the 20th century, and particularly the genesis, the course and the consequences of the two world conflicts, and thus imparting more than 30 years of research and Revisionist work. He was almost at the conclusion and the meticulous rereading when he was arrested abruptly in his tracks by this police capture.

He was also very interested in current events, and he had sent us, only

Vincent Reynouard, above, is a leading French Revisionist who has been prosecuted and jailed on multiple occasions for violating France's tyrannical Gayssot Act, which makes it a crime to "deny crimes against humanity" as outlined in the London Charter of 1945. He fled France in 2015 and is currently imprisoned in Edinburgh, where he faces a final extradition hearing on February 23, 2023.

a few dozen hours before his arrest, two articles for Rivarol, one on the Lola case, the other, briefer, in the form of droit aux lettres, on the Grégoire de Fournas case, which we published in full in our previous issue.

Finally, he participated every week for several months in the radio program of Participatory Democracy of Boris Le Lay. And Vincent's arrest obviously reinforces fears about Le Lay because, if the French authorities managed to find and capture Reynouard in a remote corner of Scotland by obtaining the active participation of Scottish justice and police, it cannot be excluded that they may, one day, perhaps less distant than one imagines, get hold of the main leader of Participatory Democracy, already sentenced to nearly 12 years of prison in our country for various violations of the Gayssot and Pleven laws.

The arrest of Vincent Reynouard in deep Scotland is destined to strike fear in people's minds. LICRA, France's International League Against Racism and Anti-Semitism, which openly welcomed the arrest, as did many community websites and blogs, tweeted on November 13, 2022: "The offender Reynouard arrested in Scotland. A message to all those who think that a flight abroad protects them from prosecution in France or from prison. It takes as long as it takes, but, in the end, they answer for their actions."

It couldn't be clearer. The lobby practices neither forgiveness nor forgetfulness and goes so far as to prosecute centenarians in wheelchairs, like the German Josef Schütz sentenced on June 28, 2022 to five years in prison—at 101 years of age!—whereas he had been a simple agricultural worker dealing exclusively with the planting and the maintenance of trees in a concentration camp 80 years ago!

However, the 53-year-old Revisionist militant Reynouard had committed no notorious imprudence. His computer was equipped with a VPN (a virtual private network) which, in principle, does not allow the user to be located, and for his rare telephone and electronic communications (to three or four friends or family), he used exclusively the Signal network which is said to be very private. We must believe that these protections are not as secure as what they say or what we often believe in our circles.

And, above all, it means that the police did not do things by halves to track, identify and capture the "offender" of thought. The police officers who arrested Vincent at milkman's hour told him that they had [used] "great means" to find him. We like to believe them. "French" intelligence (who and what is it?) would have made it possible to locate Vincent in Scotland this autumn. That is, very recently.

Reynouard was hunted down as if he were a bomb-detonating terrorist. But, in reality, the System may be more afraid of the historical and political bombs that his writings and videos often constitute because, let us not forget, the Holocaust (and everything that surrounds it) is the keystone of the World System.

Moreover, if this were not the case, do we believe that they would have deployed so many expensive means, put pressure on the British justice and police, most probably carried out long wiretapping, close surveillance, constant espionage, incessant hunting? For Vincent was not and is not a threat to anyone. Isolated, almost deprived of everything, without a penny, almost without clothes, without bank account, without salary, without job, without future, without hope of retirement, without social security, he was in a situation of great precariousness, living only on donations (since he could no longer, for security, give private lessons since his flight on October 25, 2021).

Objectively he did not represent any danger. He also has a relatively limited number of followers and supporters on social networks. And there are even fewer Revisionist sympathizers in the UK than in France. But the thought police that continues to strengthen and extend its monstrous tentacles no longer allows even the buzzing of a mosquito. It must be crushed mercilessly, as Israeli tanks regularly do with Palestinian children, a kind of modern Gavroches[2] equipped only with a modest stone facing the machine of death, facing the oppressor, and animated by the unyielding will to finally live free and standing after so many humiliations, harassments, injustices and crimes that the occupying Power multiplies with impunity and in good conscience, protected and sanctified by a dogmatized Memory.

Reynouard is currently incarcerated in Edinburgh prison in Scotland. He tells us that he is doing well, that his morale is good, that his conditions of detention are very good and that he gets along well with his current cellmate, even if he unfortunately leaves the television on all day and [watches] reality TV shows. But the television perpetually on and with its loud sound is nothing more and nothing less than a form of torture. Vincent has refused his extradition and is currently receiving the help of a court-appointed Scottish lawyer.

The hearing to determine whether or not he will be extradited is scheduled for February 23, 2023. [The prosecutor refused a first request for release given the risk of flight of the Revisionist activist.—Ed.] If British law were applied, Vincent should be released and under no circumstances extradited to France. There is no offense of "denial" in the United Kingdom. There is no equivalent of the Gayssot law.

Vincent Reynouard was hunted down as if he were a bomb-detonating terrorist.

Gen. Jean-Philippe Reiland, head of the Central Office for the Fight against Crimes Against Humanity (OCLCH), who led this hunt and who openly welcomes Vincent's arrest, himself acknowledges "legal difficulties" for Vincent's incarceration and extradition, since the offense for which Reynouard was convicted in France does not exist in Great Britain. But no matter! They are not close to that! As the late Prof. Robert Faurisson said, "in matters of historical Revisionism, there is no faith, no law."

Note that at one time the generals earned their stars on the battlefield. Today they glean them, thanks to Oradour-sur-Glane, by ruthlessly hunting down nationalists and Revisionists, by making themselves the lamentable kapos of the thought police.

Let us also remember the Maurice Papon affair in 1999: the nonagenarian had thought he could find refuge in Switzerland. In defiance of all legal procedure, and even though it takes months or even years to obtain the extradition of dangerous terrorists or sex offenders, Papon was flown back the same day to France.

The president of the Swiss Confederation at the time held a press conference in which she declared very tellingly: "The Swiss Confederation is not willing or able to keep on its territory a man convicted of crimes against humanity." In the same way, we might add, the Swiss Confederation is unwilling and unable to protect the vaults of its banks when the major Jewish organizations demand accountability in hard cash! There is no need to even rob them. Just claim and serve!

Reynouard was taken into custody on an arrest warrant dated June 25, 2021 issued by France, following his conviction by the Court of Appeal of Caen on June 17, 2015, to one year in prison (judgment confirmed on June 21, 2016 by the Court of Cassation) for a 2014 video, now deleted and therefore not found, on the occasion of the 70th anniversary of the D-Day landings on the beaches of Normandy. This video stigmatized school propaganda, [the] brainwashing of children and teenagers but no hate speech, contrary to what is said, was uttered.

Moreover, all those who know Reynouard well can testify to the fact that he is extremely kind, that he is incapable of hatred, vengeance and malice toward anyone, even toward his fiercest, most unjust and most vehement opponents, and even if one can rightly challenge some of his positions and statements, and in particular his religious and philosophical evolution over the last 10 years, the fact remains that he has accomplished monumental work in the field of Revisionism, that he has never called for violence (he is a pacifist) and that the persecution he has suffered for several decades and which continues to worsen, to the point of becoming completely delusional, must be publicly denounced.

The Myth of Oradour

Vincent Reynouard first caught the attention of the thought police for a book he wrote correcting the historical record in regard to the "massacre" at Oradour-sur-Glane in France. French terrorists captured and killed Maj. Helmut Kämpfe (left). The Germans were then accused of murdering 642 French civilians in the town in retaliation. The truth of the matter is far different from what history books tell us, however. Charles de Gaulle made sure this myth stayed alive by preserving the town as a "perpetual outdoor war crimes museum," as shown in the recent photo taken of the site above.

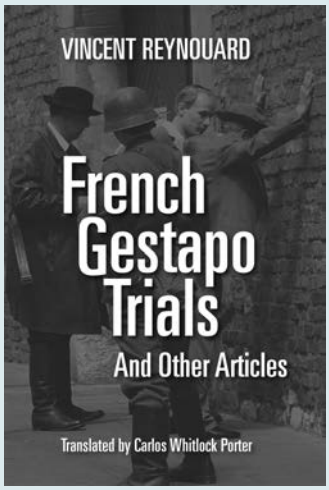
We can also regret, but here too it is a sign of the time, that no major personality has so far denounced the unjust and cruel fate that is done to him. Not among intellectuals, not among politicians, not among clerics, not among writers. It is also by this that we measure the decline in courage that the great Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn already denounced in a masterful way in his Harvard speech in 1975![3]

Since he went into exile in Britain on June 16, 2015, Reynouard had been sentenced in all (including the judgment of the Court of Appeal of Caen) to 27 months in prison. If he were extradited, he should normally be able to oppose these judgments because he was absent abroad. But there is nothing to say that he would be sentenced less heavily in the event of new trials.

It is on his sentence by the Court of Appeal of Caen to one year in prison on June 17, 2015 that Gen. Reiland relies to ask Scotland for the extradition of Vincent because, according to him, it took a sentence of at least one year for the police and the justice of Her Gracious Majesty to agree to cooperate closely and actively participate in the hunt for the Revisionist "militant."

We will continue to denounce the unbearable injustices he endured during his previous incarceration in Brussels, then in Valenciennes, from July 9, 2010 to April 5, 2011. Also we will remind people of the plight of the essayist Hervé Ryssen, incarcerated for seven months in Fleury-Mérogis Prison from September 18, 2020 to April 17,



French Gestapo Trials & Other Articles

By Vincent Reynouard. Translated by Carlos Whitlock Porter. A few years ago, Vincent Reynouard—currently imprisoned in Scotland facing extradition to France for the "crime" of publishing a Revisionist video in 2014—had a brainstorm. He would compare the accusations made against the Gestapo at Nuremberg by the French with the postwar French trials of the same personnel, involving the same cases, the same victims, the same witnesses. What he found was that the evidence and accusations were not the same: The accusations made at Nuremberg in these same cases had already been investigated and were already forgotten. This review of the French Gestapo trials offers some of the best proof that the "evidence" presented against the Germans at the Nuremberg trials was fabricated. The articles in this book are scholarly, serious and well-researched and include ones covering: Gestapo behavior toward women and young girls; a summary of Gestapo cases; legends about the Gestapo; the truth about Oradour-sur-Glane; the sea water medical experiments; the origins of the emaciated corpses and more. 2021. However, these men are not the only ones currently suffering the wrath of repression, even if they are currently the most persecuted.

Our friend René-Louis Berclaz, courageous director of the Courrier du Continent and editor of the well-documented Bocage Info, which offers exhaustive news with metronome regularity about Revisionism around the world, was searched at his Swiss home on October 14, 2022, and the police seized his sealed computer. [O]ur friend can no longer write the very interesting and very valuable dispatches of Bocage Info, until his computer is returned to him (if however [it] is returned one day!) because the e-mail addresses of some 500 correspondents of Bocage were inside.

The Swiss police acted following a complaint by CICAD, the Intercommunity Coordination Against Anti-Semitism and Defamation, denouncing several articles in the Courrier du Continent. CICAD used a rather unworthy ruse. One of its members, calling himself Didier Deharme, having subscribed last March to our friend's newsletter, using a discreet and very little-known but existing postal address of CICAD, asked to be sent the magazine each month.

On March 9, 2022, praise was sent in an email addressed to Berclaz: "I thank you in advance and at the same time wish to express my gratitude for the essential work you do." In reality, it was a way to read the bulletin to track down all the texts, all the passages that could be prosecuted before the Swiss courts because of their allegedly hateful nature.

While awaiting trial, Berclaz, deprived of his main working tool, now under sequestration, was forced to reduce to four pages the Courrier du Continent, whose pertinent motto is worth recalling: "When truth is not free, freedom is not true." For those who want to help the brave Berclaz, we give you the contact details of his newsletter: Les Editions de Cassandra, P.O. Box 46, CH-3960 Sierre, Switzerland. His email address is: editionsdecassandra@yahoo.fr

If we add to this already gloomy picture that Revisionists are also persecuted in Italy, such as the lawyer Edoardo Longo, imprisoned following a warrant of detention from the Trieste Public Prosecutor's Office since July 19, 2022 and for a period of four years and 12 days, no less, and even in the United States, like Germar Rudolf, currently threatened with extradition to Germany where he faces up to 15 years in prison, not to mention the identitarian and neo-rightist Pierre Krebs, whose computer was seized in recent days at his home in Germany by hysterical police officers who brutalized, beat and injured him, we say that their world is decidedly a vast prison and a life-sized nightmare.

To resist valiantly and durably this steamroller, it will take more courage than ever, as Prof. Faurisson, who knew what he was talking about, said. "Not only intrepid men but heroic men champion the cause of Revisionism. May God, in His infinite mercy, help us mightily." ❖

Tyrannical French politicians and special interest groups are taking aim at a popular nationalist publication because the "progressive" ruling regime doesn't like public criticism of its policies.

By Rémi Tremblay

When it comes to the dissident press, French nationalists have several titles to choose from. The list of nationalist print publications in France is impressive and reflects the diversity of unorthodox views composing the broader movement.

Royalist, identitarian, nationalist Catholic, New Rightist and neo-Fascist movements and organizations all have their monthly or even weekly press. Until very recently, the daily newspaper, Présent was at the forefront of this media constellation. However, like the rest of the printed press, the nationalist press is currently in crisis, especially with soaring inflation and the increase in the price of paper. Several titles are in jeopardy, and to make matters worse, the government is currently trying to destroy one of the most iconic and hard-hitting publications: Rivarol.

Rivarol, a weekly newspaper, is the dean of the nationalist publications. Founded 70 years ago, it has been the rallying point of the so-called "far-right" for several decades, offering a voice to anyone on the right of the National Rally, formerly the National Front.

Rivarol was founded in January 1951 by the owner and founder of the periodical Ecrits de Paris, René Malliavin, with the help of some young, dedicated enthusiasts such as Antoine Blondin, François Brigneau and Maurice Gaït. Over the years, it has welcomed talented and renowned authors like Pierre-Antoine Cousteau, Lucien Rebatet, Robert Poulet, Maurice Bardèche, François Duprat, Paul Rassinier and even Céline, who wrote at least once in its pages.

> The government of France does not like Rivarol, thus, Rivarol must be silenced.

Originally firmly opposed to Gen. Charles de Gaulle, the leader of the French government-in-exile following the collapse of the Third Republic after Germany's successful invasion in 1940, and supportive of an amnesty for so-called "collaborators" of the Vichy French government (one of the reasons for its founding, according to journalist Léon Camus), the nationalist publication managed to adapt itself to current events and to avoid being stuck in outdated positions. Over the past dozen years, under the leadership of editor-in-chief Jérôme Bourbon, who took over in 2010, the newspaper adopted an openly Revisionist approach, as well as an anti-Zionist stance, breaking away from the original position in favor of Israel that marked the paper at its inception.

In their 70th anniversary edition, Bourbon stated that Rivarol had been a symbol of "commitment, loyalty, and risk-taking."

The editor described the paper's philosophy as "a radical refusal of the system inherited from the Second World War" which was "based on lies, intransigence and radicality, but also of hope."[1] And, indeed, it has followed that hard line without giving up an inch, as "nothing is more remote to us than the spirit of compromise, concession, moderation, which are words that often conceal compromises and sellouts."[2]

In the land of Voltaire, these sorts of bold statements are the kind of things that bring you in front of a judge in modern France. Bourbon has been sued more than once, even risking prison for his political writings, just like Hervé Ryssen, the dissident Revisionist historian and writer who found a friend and comrade in the figure of Bourbon.

In 2021, the editor-in-chief of Rivarol was convicted of "contesting a crime against humanity" for claiming in a video that Marshal Philippe Pétain had actually saved Jewish lives during WWII, a statement with which honest historians agree, and one that is objectively true. In the decade before, Bourbon had been convicted countless times, accumulating fines amounting to thousands of euros for similar speech crimes, as Revisionism is punished by law in France. On September 7, 2022, Bourbon had to appear before the judicial court of Paris at Porte de Clichy for charges relating to "homophobia and contestation of crimes against humanity," which were pursued by the French prosecutor at the behest of organized Jewish groups.

However, Rivarol would not die fast enough. Suits were won against the infringing newspaper, but it refused to vanish. Previously, on March 7, 2022, the left-wing daily Le Monde, a leading French publication that once claimed to support Charlie Hebdo and freedom of speech at large, published an open letter signed by historians "specialized in fighting revisionism," such as the Israeli Stéphanie Share, Emmanuel Debono and Cécile Alduly, who demanded an end to the recognition of Rivarol as a legitimate newspaper. According to the petitioners, it is "the most racist, the most anti-Semitic and the most negationist weekly that exists."

They demanded that the Joint Commission for Publications and Press Agencies (Commission paritaire des publications et agences de presse—CPPAP) revoke the official status of Rivarol, a move that would make it extremely difficult for the dissident newspaper to publish and distribute. Afterward, various organizations, such as the LICRA—the

The front page of the September 21, 2022, edition of Rivarol, above, includes a politically incorrect cartoon accompanied by Jérôme Bourbon's editorial, "Immigrants poured into the countryside and euthanasia for all!" In the article, Bourbon offers a scathing critique of France's political leadership, which has presided over "an unprecedented regression of fundamental freedoms." The French state, Bourbon argues, is dedicated to implementing "the devastating measures" the globalist power structure has "chosen and mandated" for France and other Western nations, including the nation-wrecking policies of mass immigration. Rivarol pulls no punches, offering an unfiltered take on the most controversial topics of the day. Glancing at their headlines, it is no wonder they are in the crosshairs of the thought police.

French equivalent of the ADL—joined the fight and in May, they finally won: the Joint Commission ditched Rivarol.

The persecution of the paper has only increased, as its presence in kiosks, press houses, supermarkets and other shops and newsstands has shrunk largely due to pressure from LICRA and other activist groups.

"We have been banned since the beginning of August at Carrefour, Monoprix, Cultura, Cora and in the Relay [strategic newsstands in train stations and airports] and at a significant number of other merchants and brands," Bourbon noted in an editorial published in early September. "We resist as much as we can; we try to relocate where possible. But it's not easy."

What may seem to be a simple and trivial administrative measure may actually mean the death of the historic newspaper. With the revocation of its "official" press status, it will then be impossible to sell in newsstands. It will also suffer from a tenfold tax increase, and it will lose access to discounted postage fees for newspapers. Thus, the price of subscriptions will surely be hiked in the near future. It is likely that most of the current subscribers will accept to pledge the extra amount, but, in the long run, this business plan is doomed to fail.

This administrative move is more insidious and more efficient than an open ban that would raise questions about freedom of speech. But Bourbon is perfectly lucid: "They want to choke us, suffocate us, murder us. It is our killing that is demanded; our murder that is planned."[3]

On March 16, 2022, the editor-in-chief explained that Rivarol was mainly targeted for its "independence and insolence."

Its "very existence is unbearable for the lobby we cannot name," Bourbon proclaimed. "For the last two years, it has waged an active, if not hysterical, campaign to kill this newspaper."[4]

He presented the larger picture:

ANTOINE RIVAROL
Defender of the Ancien Régime.

Emmanuel Macron's government has been actively restricting freedoms, by banning pro-Palestinian organizations, adding restrictions on homeschooling and independent schools, and restricting what can be said on the internet. Additionally, organized far-left groups, such as Sleeping Giants, an organization of "fanatical Judeo-Zionists," according to Bourbon, are "putting pressure on press distributors to ban us from everywhere, so that we are economically strangled and disappear quickly and permanently."

"It's as simple as that," the editor-in-chief explained. "They make no secret of it. Anyone attached to his roots, his land, his blood, his faith, his God, his traditions, his ancestors, is suspicious and potentially criminal in their eyes."

Their goal is to target and eliminate "all dissidents" as well as "all those who do not resign themselves to the death of our homeland and our civilization, to the domestication of consciousness, to the lobotomization of minds, to the hardening of hearts and the enslavement of souls," Bourbon has powerfully argued.[5]

The future is bleak not only for Rivarol, but also for the whole nationalist media in France. The political victory in the spring of 2022 with the election of 89 National Rally MPs does not make up for the crisis dissident media outlets and publications are experiencing. Not only do costs continue to increase, but younger generations get their news electronically. Therefore, the number of subscriptions decreases. Some titles have already disappeared, like the iconic Action française, Le Lys noir and Minute.

Other publications have had to change their frequency, like Présent, while others are now turning toward a model only based on subscriptions. Still others, including Lectures françaises and Lectures et Tradition, are merging for cost efficiency. It is also likely that, after Rivarol, other publications might be targeted. After all, the French state has recently banned several nationalist organizations (Génération identitaire, Oeuvre française, Troisième Voie, Bastion social and Alvarium), without anything remotely criminal to hold against them.

This is how "democracy" in France really works: Dissident voices and publications are systematically silenced, particularly those that openly challenge officially sanctioned narratives pertaining to WWII. ❖

War on the Border: Villa, Pershing, the Texas Rangers & an American Invasion

By Jeff Guinn. The "Punitive Expedition" under Gen. John J. Pershing was launched to stop raids by Mexican guerrillas on the border. It included members of the Army, National Guard and the Texas Rangers. Opposing this brigade was Pancho Villa, who commanded a motley force of conscripts in Mexico. Here is the full story of that struggle. Hardback, 368 pages, #941, $28.

Secret History of the Wild, Wild West: Outlaws, Secret Societies & the Hidden Agenda of the Elites

Author Daniel J. Duke—the great-great-grandson of Jesse James—reveals that Jesse and other infamous outlaws were part of a larger organization, centuries old, that has affected U.S. history from the rural streets of early America to the highest levels of the government, with continuing influence today. Drawing on secret diaries, Duke unravels the hidden history of the Wild West to expose the outlaws, politicians and secret societies who were pulling strings behind the scenes. Lawbreaking Ladies: 50 Tales of Daring, Defiant and Dangerous Women from History

These gals were anything but sugar, spice and everything nice! Author Erika Owen tells the stories of 50 remarkable women whose rebellious and often criminal acts ought to solidify their place in history. Hardback, 208 pages, #948, $20.

American History Revised: 200 Startling Facts That Never Made It Into the Textbooks

By Seymour Morris Jr. The biggest mistake the Ford Motor Co. ever made? Most women's groups opposed the Equal Rights Amendment? The No. 1 bestselling American book of all time was written in a day? The Dutch made a bad investment when they bought Manhattan? Three times, a private financier saved the United States from bankruptcy? Dozens more fascinating and little-known facts about American history you may not know. Softcover, 432 pages, #950, $20.

Patriot or Traitor: Sir Walter Ralegh

Nearly all of what we think we know about Sir Walter Ralegh—potatoes, tobacco, spreading his cloak over a muddy puddle etc.—is fable. The real story is far more exciting. He rose to become Queen Elizabeth's favorite, only to be charged with treason by her successor. Less than a year after the death of Elizabeth I, Ralegh was in the Tower of London, watching as the scene was set for his own execution. Softcover, 336 pages, #946, $18.

Johann Ewald: Jäeger Commander

Johann Ewald began as a commoner in the Holy Roman Empire. As a soldier, he fought in all of the great conflicts of the latter 18th century, and he keenly recorded his observations of both the people he met and places he encountered. Among all but a small group of dedicated scholars of the American Revolution, however, Ewald has vanished into obscurity. There are no other English-language biographies of Ewald, and James McIntyre's book focuses on the conduct of irregular—guerrilla—operations: raids, ambushes and the like. Softcover, 400 pages, #954, $19.

Mass Murder at Katyn

Here is the first-ever full English translation of the complete forensic report by the German government detailing the mass murder of Polish officers and officials by the Soviet Union's secret police in the Katyn Forest, originally published in 1943. Dismissed as "propaganda" and ignored for nearly 50 years, this report was completely accurate, and, if anything, an understatement of the nature of Soviet Bolshevism. Softcover, 290 pages, 8.5" x 11", #929, $28.

The Man in the Iron Mask: The True Story of Europe's Most Famous Prisoner

Josephine Wilkinson solves one of the most enduring mysteries of Louis XIV's reign and, using contemporary documents, this book shows what life was really like for state prisoners in 17th-century France—and offers insight into why this mysterious man was arrested and why. What WWII Has Wrought

A "politically incorrect" explanation

TBR reader Angela Woywood pens a letter to her nephew to set the record straight

The following long letter, written by a German American to her young nephew, is published here in full with minor edits for clarification purposes. It attempts to explain in layman's terms the reality of WWII, invoking numerous Revisionist contentions and perspectives with which longtime readers of TBR are no doubt familiar. Unpacking all the lies associated with WWII—and other aspects of history, for that matter—is never an easy task. This letter is an effective and quite persuasive approach to the controversial topic. We know you'll enjoy it and maybe even pick up a tip or two when approaching your family, friends, and other acquaintances regarding this critical subject.

Dear Bradley,

Since you have German roots, you should know some details about WWII and the Third Reich that have mostly been kept secret, namely that the Allies did not always conduct themselves in a noble way during and especially after WWII.

It has become a norm for the media and others to casually mention the "6 million number" whenever they can, even though it has been lowered over the years by historians and even by organizations that profit from the Holocaust, but the 6 million number keeps popping up again and again. Some of the reporters that help spread these outrageous stories may not really know the truth, either, since they have been brainwashed to believe in the Holocaust like much of the rest of the world.

JEAN-CLAUDE PRESSAC
Early French Revisionist.

At the Nuremberg trials in 1945, that have in the meantime earned the name "Kangaroo Court" by Revisionists for the blatant politicization and unfairness on display throughout the process, the Allies charged that the Germans had gassed 4 million Jews at Auschwitz alone. This lie was accepted by the court and was passed on for years until, finally, in July 1990, the Auschwitz-Birkenau Museum and also the Yad Vashem Holocaust center in Israel, lowered that number to 1.1 million inmates of all creeds.

What's more, in 1993, well-known and respected French Holocaust researcher Jean-Claude Pressac insisted after extensive research, studying the list Germans had kept of inmates from 1939 to 1945, that, altogether, only 775,000 people died at Auschwitz from different causes such as illness, old age and starvation, but not from getting gassed as claimed by the Holocaust industry. He stated that most deaths happened during the last six months of the war because of Allied bombings and the embargo placed by the Allies.

Zionists and their collaborators have been able to infiltrate the educational system in the U.S. as well as in Europe and other Western countries to make sure that the wartime propaganda lies and Holocaust tales continue to be taught in schools to ensure that the money flow and other favors from Germany, and also from the U.S., will continue into the future.

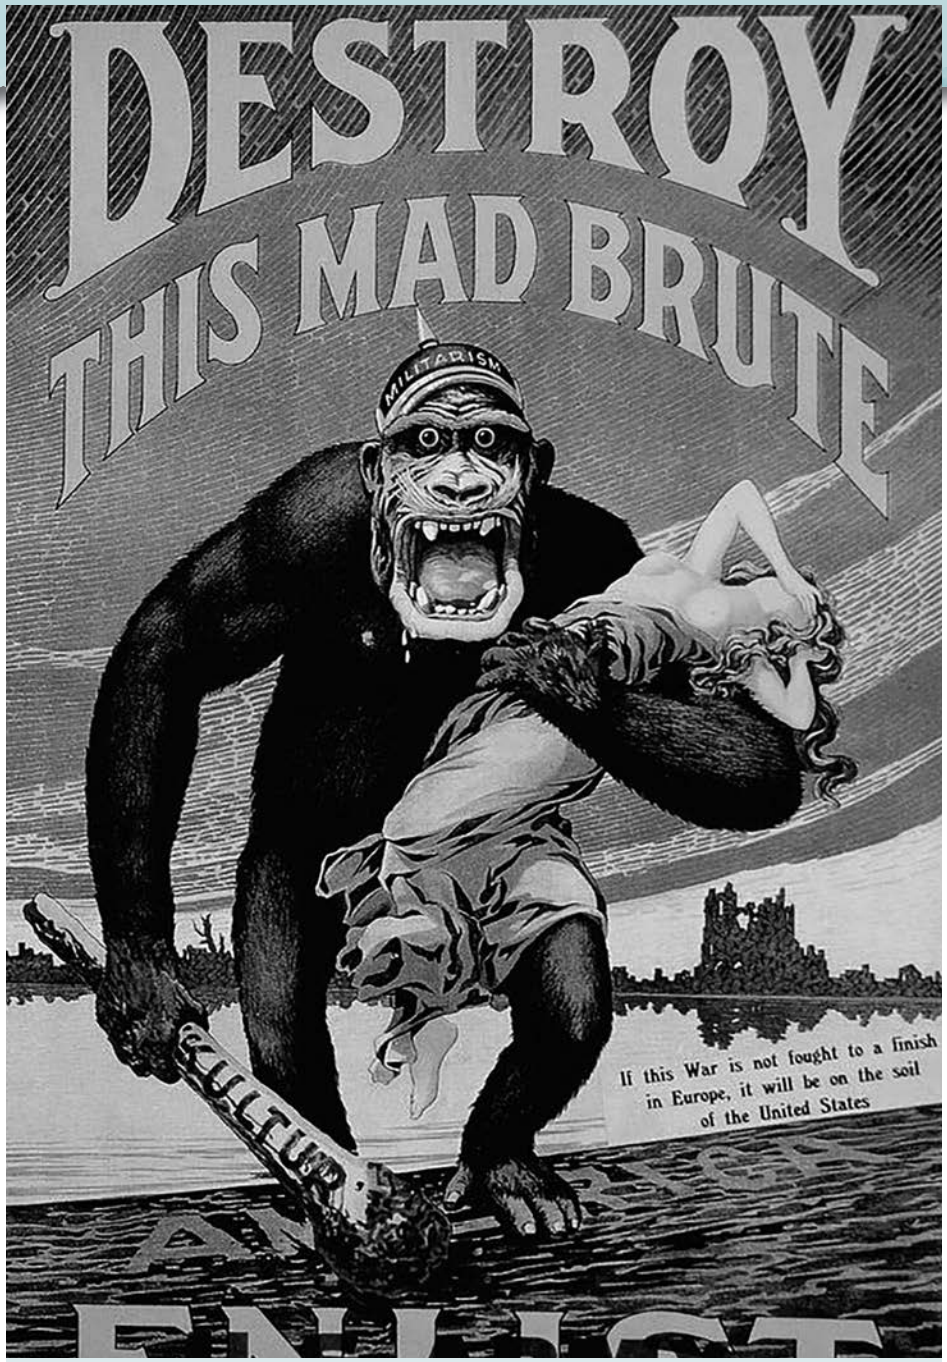
GERMAN IMPACT ON AMERICA

Germany is seldom mentioned favorably by the media yet has contributed greatly to the growth and power of the United States. Germans are still the largest single ethnic group in the United States, but this may change in a very few years if migration from Mexico and Central America is allowed to continue. Some 46 million people claimed German ancestry during the 2013 congressional caucus, more than Irish or English.

They are the "silent majority." They don't take to the streets and demolish and set fires to buildings when they don't like something. Instead, they most likely will send a letter to the newspaper or make phone calls to their representatives and settle a problem or voice a complaint the proper way.

They brought to America and the many other countries they moved to all sorts of inventions, food items, customs and traditions, including the Christmas tree, the Easter bunny, hot dogs and hamburgers, bratwurst and sauerkraut, beer and pretzels, pumpernickel bread, Christmas stollen, Octoberfest, kindergarten, many different dog breeds like the Rottweiler, Weimaraner, Dachshund, Doberman, Great Dane, Boxers, the Spitz and even the Poodle, among others.

German Americans are quietly successful. Their household income is 18% above the norm and they are more likely to have a college degree and less likely to be unemployed than other Americans. They prospered on their own without government handouts. You can be proud of your German roots, Bradley. Disregard how they are being depicted by the media and some German-haters.



DESTROY
THIS MAD BRUTE
MILITARISM
If this War is not fought to a finish in Europe, it will be on the soil of the United States

Germans have played an important role in the founding and building of America. The mass media, Hollywood, U.S. politicians and war propagandists, including Harry R. Hopps, who drew the iconic World War I anti-German propaganda poster shown above, have incessantly smeared the German people since WWI. To this day Germans are ubiquitously portrayed in Hollywood as evil monsters.

ANOTHER VIEW OF HITLER

Here is a little history lesson for you that you did not learn at school. It is what they call a "politically incorrect" subject and, unfortunately, you have to be careful with whom and where you discuss it.

When it became apparent Germany would lose the war, Hitler killed himself after his wife's suicide. Their remains were taken to Russia. I have come to the conclusion after much research about World War II, Hitler and the Third Reich, that he really was a kind-hearted and sensitive human being, better than most and certainly far superior to our modern political "leaders."

I am convinced that he never ordered the extermination of the Jewish people that were living in Europe. No proof or any signed documents has ever been found that would substantiate this accusation. Yet the Zionists have been able to convince nearly the whole world that the "evil Nazis" gassed 6 million Jews during WWII. If one hears a lie over and over, no matter how outrageous, he will start to believe it, especially if it comes down from your own government, which it does now.

Hitler was a vegetarian because he loved animals. Laws were created during his leadership that made the torture and mistreatment of animals a capital offense. Throwing live lobsters into boiling water, which is still being done today in the U.S., was outlawed. Factory farming, a big money-making industry in the United States, never received a business license during the Third Reich period.

Hitler has been vilified by the invisible power, the Zionists, whose supporters and sympathizers are stronger today than ever. They want open borders and a one-race (colored) human population. He intended to stop their meddling in political affairs and in big industry where they had managed to occupy leading positions. He wanted them out of the country and made this known in his book Mein Kampf, published in 1925. He negotiated unsuccessfully with England to move the Jews to Palestine or Madagascar and was also in contact with South American countries to move the Jews there, but was not successful with these negotiations either.

Many Jewish organizations declared economic war on Germany and demanded that all Jews, no matter where they lived, boycott German goods and do their part in destroying the German economy and its power. So, when the war started, they became an enemy living within, but it still took two more years into the war before many of them were incarcerated for security reasons. The U.S. began incarcerating its German, Italian and Japanese minorities by 1939, even before becoming involved in the war; 10,000 German Americans were put into camps. They were never compensated for the lost years that they were held and for losing their livelihoods, as were the Japanese.

Images of dead Germans depicted as Jews were used in the Nuremberg court proceedings.

ALLIED WAR CRIMINALS

Instead of Hitler, the real criminals, in my opinion, were Churchill, Stalin and Roosevelt. They ordered the murderous slaughter of German civilians by dropping bombs on them. Most big cities in Germany were bombed and destroyed between 1940 and 1945, resulting in the killing of over 1 million women, children, and elderly, mostly innocent civilians. This, of course, brought on retaliation from the German side and 60,000 British civilians lost their lives through bombing, which Hitler reluctantly ordered. But Germany bombed mostly military targets while the Allies concentrated on killing civilians.

Dresden, the most beautiful town in Europe and of no military importance, was bombed and nearly totally destroyed two months before the end of the war. 250,000 civilians, probably even more, died during two days and nights of bombing. But that was not enough for Churchill. After the bombing, he sent low-flying airplanes to shoot at survivors who were trying to reach the river, including doctors and nurses carrying patients away from the burning hospital. Even a children's choir was targeted, the children huddled together, all shot dead, as were the animals from the zoo.

The present German government, controlled by the Zionists, is playing down the number of people killed in Dresden and ordered the number to be announced to tourists to be 25,000, which is still a large number of people to die in only two days. But there were thousands of unregistered refugees from the East in town who had fled from the murdering, raping hordes of the Red Army, so the real number will never be known. It is estimated to be around 250,000 civilians killed. Images of dead Germans depicted as Jews were used in the Nuremberg court proceedings as evidence to sentence to death the Nazi leadership.

When the war was finally over, German soldiers did not want to give up and fought to the death because of the Allied "unconditional surrender" demand, and most big cities in Germany laid in ashes with a million innocent lives lost—women, children, and elderly. [See TBR's July/ August 2022 edition "The Allies' Surrender Policy" by John Wear—Ed.]

The bombing of towns and the shootings by low-flying planes targeting farm animals and people working in the field were war crimes, but the perpetrators were never punished, their crimes never reported. On the contrary, they are entered in the history books as the "good guys" that fought the "bad guys"—Hitler and the Nazis. My mother—your grandmother—was a target of one of them while pushing a baby carriage with a nine-week-old baby, your Uncle Karl. She ran from house to house, but doors were locked. The pilot came circling back several times shooting at her. When she talked about this experience afterward, she exclaimed, "The beast came back again and again."

The present German government, under the watchful eyes of the Zionists, never mentions the crimes of the Allies, such as the immediate execution by the "liberators" in 1945 of 560 former guards, doctors and other employees at Auschwitz. The German government does, however, obediently continue to accuse its own people of war crimes. Individual politicians even kneel to apologize during these events. Disgusting!

WHO REALLY STARTED WWII?

The Nazis are accused of starting WWII. It is true that Germany invaded Poland on September 1, 1939, but did so only after many failed peace negotiations. The Poles saw little reason to negotiate with Hitler since they had a signed agreement with England and France that would support them in case of war with Germany. It was England and France that declared war on Germany on September 3, 1939. They started WWII and are responsible for the deaths of around 80 million people on all sides. They did not declare war on Russia even though the Russians had also invaded Poland two weeks after the Germans did on September 17, 1939. Why not?

Many historians now agree that Hitler had no choice but to invade Poland because of the intolerable mistreatment of the German minority there. England could have easily stopped these mistreatments and massacres and urge Poland to accept Hitler's peace offer. Hitler wanted the German town of Danzig liberated, which was detached from Germany after WWI, and declared a free city. He also requested a strip of land for a freeway and railroad so Germans could travel to their relatives in East Prussia. Not an unreasonable request for the sake of peace.

In return he was willing to give up Upper Silesia and West Prussia and call the new borders that were created after WWI permanent. This agreement would have abandoned around 1 million ethnic Germans, thus many Germans were against this offer. But Poland stubbornly refused the offer with the backing of England. The commander in chief of the Polish army, Edward Rydz-Smigly, declared in the summer of 1939, "Poland wants war with Germany, and Germany won't be able to avoid it, even if she wants to."

Approximately 59,000 ethnic Germans were slaughtered by the Poles. Lufthansa airplanes en route to East Prussia were shot at. In August 1939, Poland closed Danzig's borders, creating a critical shortage of food and other supplies imported from the Reich. Hitler again turned to the British to help persuade the Poles to resume talks with Germany, but to no avail. Poland wanted war with Germany and so did England. War was inevitable. Hitler was forced into it.

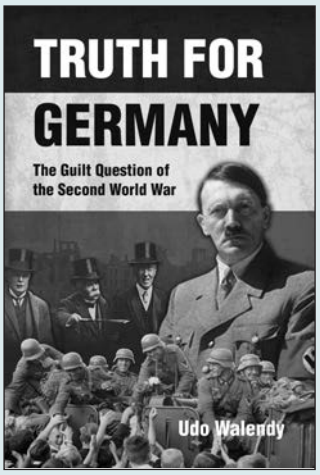
Shortly before war started, Smigly said in a speech:

> Soon we will be marching against the hereditary German enemy to finally knock out his poison fangs. The first step on this march will be Danzig. Keep ready for the day of reckoning with this arrogant German race. The hour of revenge is nigh.

Their hate for Germans, which was really jealousy, was stronger than their want for peace. Germans were the main landowners and richer than the Poles, and many Poles were employed by them.

Poland and all of Eastern Europe would have been better off had the Poles accepted Hitler's offer and returned Danzig to Germany. There would have been no WWII, no Iron Curtain, no Berlin Wall and no nuclear arms race with Russia. When Germany was destroyed, England, France and the United States allowed Poland and Eastern Europe to fall under the dominion of the Soviet Union.

Since then, nothing has changed in the relationship between Poland and Germany. Even though Poland received large portions of former German territory where German farmers had been very prosperous, Poles are still poor, and their country needs help from the European Union. They now even demand reparations from



TWO BOOKS FROM UDO WALENDY

Truth for Germany: The Guilt Question of the Second World War

The mainstream historical establishment insists that WWI and WWII were started by Germany. But what facts exist to support this seemingly unchallengeable hypothesis? In this book, the myth of Germany's guilt for fomenting war is refuted by famed historian Udo Walendy. Covers the allegations that Germany instigated the war, debunks long-held fallacies about German atrocities, the true nature of Hitler and more. Softcover, 535 pages, #648, $30 minus 10% for TBR subscribers.

The Brainwashing of the German Nation

By Udo Walendy. The author has been imprisoned because he refuses to parrot the official lies of the German and Allied governments. Here, Walendy describes the hidden truth of the "legal" origin of today's German laws, forced on a defeated people, now stripped of their history and their identity. If you want to know why the German government is so intent on suppressing "Holocaust" research, then you need to read this book. Softcover, #110, 64 pages, $9 minus 10% for TBR subscribers.

Hitler's Commando: The Daring Missions of Otto Skorzeny and the Nazi Special Forces

By Otto Skorzeny. Foreword by Charles Messenger. Introduction by Dan Raviv. Otto Skorzeny was Adolf Hitler's favorite soldier and Germany's top commando in World War II. His extraordinary wartime career was amazing. It was Skorzeny who successfully led the daring glider rescue of Benito Mussolini. Skorzeny was also sent to Budapest to stop the Hungarian regent Adm. Miklos Horthy from signing a peace treaty with Stalin in 1944. A few months later, he took a critical role in the Ardennes offensive with a controversial plan to raise a brigade disguised as Americans with captured U.S. tanks. A fascinating depiction of commando action, Skorzeny's memoirs are a key addition to special forces literature. The author gives us fascinating details about his many famous missions between 1943 and the end of the war and he offers a fair appraisal of the war situation in Germany, as well as any tactical and military mistakes. Skorzeny also sheds light on several personalities in a new way. The book also includes several pages of interesting photos. This is a great book for anyone interested in the history of military special operations, which Otto Skorzeny played a key role in developing. Softcover, 244 pages, #887, $20 minus 10% for TBR subscribers plus $5 S&H inside the U.S. from TBR, P.O. Box 550, White Plains, MD 20695.

Germany for invading them. They are not satisfied with what they already have received. Many Poles immigrated to Germany after the war, and many continue to do so today. Germans are generally accepting towards them and are willing to forgive and forget the past.

GERMAN WAR EFFORTS AND DELIBERATE SABOTAGE

The Poles anticipated a quick victory over Germany and thought they could occupy Berlin within six weeks. But the opposite happened. Germany defeated the Poles within five weeks, even though the Polish army was four times larger than the German army at that time. The British also were confident they could quickly win the war against Germany but were defeated by the Germans within a few months and needed the Americans to help them out, just like during WWI.

The British had been in contact with disloyal Germans—traitors—led by Adm. Wilhelm Canaris. He assured Churchill that, if England would attack Germany, the German generals were ready to revolt against the Hitler regime and establish a new government. Canaris supplied the British, as well as the Soviets, with classified information regarding German defense capabilities and details of submarine developments.

Once the war started, these conspirators sabotaged everything from weapons supplies, gasoline, medical supplies and delivery of winter clothing for the soldiers, and provided intelligence detailing where and how the Germans planned to attack. The reeducated Germans built a monument for these traitors that were responsible for the deaths of millions of their own people during and after the war.

Two days after Germany's invasion of Poland, Hitler sent another peace offer to England and France and offered to withdraw his troops but insisted upon the return of Danzig and a strip of land for a freeway and rail system. It was ignored.

England and France declared war on Germany on September 3, 1939, and started bombing German cities shortly after. Hitler was against the bombing of civilians but, finally, close to a year following the outbreak of hostilities and after many German cities had already been bombed by the English, he gave the order to retaliate.

The English city of Coventry, with its important military industry, was attacked by the German Luftwaffe on November 14, 1942, resulting in the loss of 380 people. A big number indeed but small when compared to the number of people that were killed in Dresden, 250,000, with around 2,000 wounded American POWs that were hospitalized in Dresden's 17 hospitals.

The three-day Allied bombing of Hamburg killed 70,000. Witnesses say that flames were rising up to one mile into the sky and that people got stuck in the molten street asphalt and died horribly. The bombing of Pforzheim and Swinemuende killed roughly 20,000 each, or 40,000 total. By the end of the war, more bombs were dropped on Berlin alone by the British and Americans than were dropped by the Germans on the whole of England.

GERMANY SOUGHT PEACE

Hitler wanted peace, and that's why he let the defeated English army, 300,000 soldiers, escape at Dunkirk between May 26 and June 4, 1940, against his generals' advice. This was a big mistake. The war would have been over then, and the end result would have been more favorable for Germany instead of the "unconditional surrender" that the surviving German people had to endure.

Hitler was hoping, when he let the huge English army escape, that they would finally accept his peace offer. He did not believe that England would go to war with Germany over the town of Danzig. The reason was not Danzig or even Poland. It was England's intent to destroy Germany because it had become England's competition on the world market. Goods with the stamp "Made in Germany" outsold all others.

Another reason for the war was the strong influence of the Zionists in the British and U.S. governments. They wanted the total destruction of the German people. They needed Stalin and his criminal mind to help accomplish this. During his reign, Stalin had millions of his own people killed, mostly the educated and well-to-do. He and his cohorts ordered the murder of 22,000 captured Polish army officers in 1940 in the Katyn forest and in other areas—and promptly accused the Germans. The Allies knew that the Germans had nothing to do with these killings, yet they collaborated with him anyway to win the war and used this accusation after the war to sentence to death innocent German military men.

EISENHOWER'S WAR CRIMES

Dwight Eisenhower was not much better than Stalin. On his orders, 100,000 German POWs were purposely starved to death while being held captive in the Rhine Meadows camps and elsewhere. They were surrounded by barbed wire fencing, had no shelter whatsoever and were thus subjected to heavy rainfall and to the extreme freezing winter temperature in 1945. There were no sanitation facilities. Sometimes food, which was kept to a minimum already, was withheld for two and three days in a row. The Red Cross was not allowed to supply food or inspect the camps, and people living in the surrounding area were warned not to bring food to the prisoners or risk getting shot. Survivors claimed that between 50 and 100 inmates died daily.

Eisenhower said to J. Kingsley Smith, a war journalist, when the U.S. joined the war: "I expect to destroy every German west of the Rhine and within every area in which we are fighting." At war's end, German soldiers tried to reach the American sector before laying down their arms hoping for fair treatment, but in Russian-controlled camps, they at least had a roof over their head.

Eisenhower should have been punished and put in jail for the rest of his life for these crimes. Instead, he became president of the United States of America. The American public never learned about the crimes he committed in Germany, thanks to the Zionist-controlled press.

THE LOOTING & DESTRUCTION OF GERMANY

The Allies and Russia confiscated thousands of research papers, patents and technology from defeated Germany. Factories were emptied of their machines and tools and moved abroad. Even railroad tracks were dismantled and moved to Russia. German scientists were kidnapped and shared between Russia, the U.S. and other countries. In Russia, the captured German scientists helped create the Sputnik satellite and, in the U.S., they sent a man to the Moon. Most Americans don't know this.

What's more, libraries were emptied of 34,000 books that contained ancient German history. New books were printed in the U.S. and distributed to German schools in the fall of 1945. These books had no German heroes and were meant to teach the children that they had nothing to be proud of and should be ashamed of their German heritage. But where would the world be without German inventions, literature, music, medicine and so on?

German POWs were used as slave labor until at least 1950. Two million never made it back home and died during captivity. Thousands of German civilians died of starvation or were otherwise murdered after the war. Thousands of orphaned children were forced to beg for food from Allied soldiers. They learned the English sentence: "Have you chocolate for me"?

The stores were empty. Vegetable seeds were withheld so people could not even plant a garden. It was the Morgenthau Plan in action, created

The Holocaust Hoax Exposed

Debunking the 20th Century's Biggest Lie

Victor Thorn's The Holocaust Hoax Exposed dissects nearly every element of what has become the most grotesque conspiracy theory of the 20th—and now the 21st—century. Covered in this book is the mythology surrounding "death camps," the truth about Zyklon B, Anne Frank's diary, how the absurd "6 million" figure has become a laughing stock. From eye-opening facts that not one autopsy exists that shows the use of Zyklon B on work camp inmates to zero photographic evidence of this supposed enormous event to the ludicrous and licentious tales woven by the "Holocaust" historians, survivors and Holocaust Hucksters, Thorn's masterpiece should be required reading for anyone interested in understanding the underpinnings of the Zionist power elite. The Morgenthau Plan in Action

Genocidal policies and crimes carried out by Allied forces—the U.S., the UK, and the Soviet Union—resulted in the systematic destruction of Germany and its people during and after WWII. Following the war, German civilians, including children such as the young girls in the photo, were destitute, struggling to find the basic necessities of life, such as food, water, and housing. While much has been made about an alleged "genocide" of Jews during WWII, purportedly carried out in a systematic, organized campaign, little is said about the total annihilation of Germany and the horrific suffering of its people, which is in fact well documented.

by Jews in high positions in the U.S. government. The plan demanded the total genocide of all Germans by getting the surviving population sterilized after the war. It also wanted all industry removed and to transform Germany into grazing land. Coal and oil were withheld to force Germans to cut down their beloved forests to keep warm during the winter.

Hitler knew about their plan. Consequently, many Jews were put into camps for security reasons.

During the last six months of the war, Germans were literally starving to death, and so were the camp inmates because of the Allied food embargo and the bombings of the railway system that made it impossible to transfer food and medicine to the camps. The Red Cross was also not allowed to deliver food to the camps, as mentioned previously. Even the Canadian trucks, colored in white, trying to deliver food to the camps were targets of low flying Allied airplanes.

This makes me wonder why this was allowed to happen and who ordered and condoned this? Did the Zionists intentionally sacrifice their own people to manufacture a reason to blame Germany after the war for the many deaths in the camps, an event now called the "Holocaust"?

OFFICIAL 'HOLOCAUST' STORY IS FALSE

No Jews or others were gassed in these camps. There were no homicidal gas chambers, only delousing chambers. This fact has been proven by several scientific investigations. No traces of cyanide have been found in the walls of the shower stalls that are claimed to have been used to gas inmates. However, it was found in the delousing chambers where inmates' clothing and other materials were treated for lice.

The biggest lie in history—that 6 million Jews were gassed or otherwise deliberately murdered during WWII by Germany in a coordinated, premeditated plan—has been very lucrative for Israel. The New York Times reported in 2012—and that number probably is much higher by now—that the Germans had paid 89 billion euros to Israel to compensate the victims for the alleged concentration camp crimes. Each Jew must be a multi-millionaire by now. And they are asking for more. Even children and grandchildren of former inmates of camps are demanding money. All they have to do is ask; no proof is needed. Germany keeps paying because of the "Holocaust" lies.

The Zionists have been successful in getting laws onto the books in Europe that forbid the discussion of new evidence that has been available since the Berlin Wall came down. The Zionists have their offices in Berlin and most other big cities in every country and keep an eye on everything that is printed, announced or mentioned regarding the "Holocaust."

One has to be very careful, especially politicians—and better not mention anything positive about the Third Reich. It could earn one a big fine, could end a career or even land one in jail in Germany.

They claim that by outlawing Revisionist perspectives about the so-called Holocaust, they are "protecting democracy." How much sense does that make? Isn't democracy all about free speech? Free speech and discussions of any subject are essential to get to the truth and are essential for future generations.

LIFE DURING THIRD REICH

But, except for the war, not everything was bad during the Third Reich. The crime rate was low, the youth was kept busy with sports, while now they are exposed to pornographic literature and illegal drugs that they get from Third World migrants. People could go for a walk at night if they wanted to and not be afraid to get robbed or killed, but they would not dare do that nowadays.

Men earned enough money so their wives did not have to go to work to help pay the bills, like they have to now. Women could stay home and take care of the children, which is a very important task. Men earned enough to be able to take their families on vacation once a year. Special areas were created for this purpose at the sea and in the mountains. They were able to buy an affordable car, the Volkswagen. Low-cost housing was available for working-class families. The mortgage was reduced by about 25% when a child was born. After the birth of a fourth child, the mortgage was eliminated. That does not sound too bad to me!

All this and more was created and endorsed by one they call the most evil man in the world: Adolf Hitler.

POST-WAR COVER UP AND ABUSES

After the war, Germans were accused of crimes that have never been proven in a legitimate court of law. Horror stories of former camp inmates during the Nuremberg trials and elsewhere were not investigated or scrutinized for truthfulness.

Germans on trial were not allowed to question their accusers. They were systematically found guilty and sentenced to death. The Nuremberg trials in 1945 and elsewhere were based on hate and revenge. No surprise there. Out of 3,000 people employed on the staff at the Nuremberg trials, 2,400 were Jewish. Courts in other areas also were dominated by Jews. On the bench in judgment of the Germans sat the mass murderers of Katyn with those responsible for the bombing of Dresden and other German towns.

Torture was used on defenseless German POWs to get them to sign confessions. They were kept awake day and night, beaten and tortured until they signed a confession. If a prisoner fell asleep, the guard would prod him with an ax handle, burning matches were driven under their fingernails and most were kicked in the testicles beyond repair. Many died from the results of their torture.

Hundreds of innocent and honorable men were sentenced to death and were hanged. Some had to suffer through an intentionally slow hanging. It is hard to comprehend that the U.S. allowed this to happen.

WHAT WWII HAS WROUGHT

The Germans have been taught by their former enemies, starting in kindergarten, to be ashamed of their Fatherland and its past. This reeducation over the years has been successful: Germans have become their own worst enemy and now welcome the invasion of their country by migrants from the Third World, people with black or brown skin, people with different languages, different cultures and religions who want to take over what Germans over centuries have created.

Eventually, because of their culture and who they are, they will change beautiful Germany and other European countries into a lawless, Third World hellhole.

This is what World War II has been all about. The Allies did not win the war, the globalists did. They want to change who we are. They will succeed if we continue to let it happen. ❖

Codifying War Propaganda: Truth Now 'Misinformation'

The German government wants to enact a law to criminalize doubting any "official" war crime or genocide narrative

By Paul Craig Roberts

Deutsche Welle, a German international broadcaster, financed by who they don't say, reports that the German government is going to criminalize denying war crimes and genocides.

Neither Deutsche Welle nor the German government reveals who it is who gets to determine the unchallengeable war crimes and genocides.

Germany gave in to the Jewish grievance lobbies and long ago criminalized "Holocaust denial." I have wondered why. If everything we are taught about the Holocaust is true, it can stand on the facts and remain undamaged by unsupported denials. What the criminalization of inquiry and debate does is prevent us from knowing the true dimension and history of the so-called Holocaust. My understanding from reading is that multiple European countries and Canada do not permit any examination of the Holocaust. We are simply told that it is true, but it can't be examined, and that is the end of that.

The Germans have suffered substantially from declared and unexamined "truths." In World War I, Germany was accused of its soldiers bayoneting Belgian babies. (In the 21st century, a version of this falsehood was repeated against Iraqi troops in Kuwait.) The propaganda created enormous hatred for Germany. These decades later, after the normalization of mothers bayoneting their own babies, it might not have the same effect. But what if it had been legislated a criminal act to investigate whether German soldiers murdered Belgian babies? The propaganda would rule the day.

HARRY ELMER BARNES
Upset the Court Historians.

Germany also was blamed for decades as the government that caused World War I, a war that put Western civilization on an uninterrupted path of decline and collapse. In 1926, a distinguished American historian, Harry Elmer Barnes, put the lie to this false claim in his book The Genesis of the World War. Marshaling enormous quantities of official documents and telegrams, he proved beyond all doubt that World War I was orchestrated by the president of France and ministers of the Russian tzar.

Germany was caught off guard by the Russian mobilization, and Germany was the last country to mobilize. How can it be that the country accused of starting the war mobilized only after Russian troops were pouring or about to pour into Prussia?

Barnes upset the Court Historians, who called him a "German agent" (the same ilk called me a "Russian agent" for giving a truthful account of the Ukraine/Russian conflict), but, in the 21st century, Cambridge University historian Christopher Clark reached Barnes's conclusion in his book The Sleepwalkers.

Briefly, the Russian tzar was deceived by ministers on whom he relied who had been conspiring without the tzar's knowledge for years with France's Raymond Poincaré to start a war that would let Russia seize the straits that connect the Black Sea to the Mediterranean, and France retake Alsace-Lorraine from Germany. British Foreign Minister Sir Edward Grey misled Parliament and the British king, pushing for a war that would rid Great Britain of Germany as a rival forever.

The Russian-French excuse was the Austro-Hungarian Empire's response to the assassination of the heir to the Austro-Hungarian throne by Serbians . The war was disastrous for all concerned. The Russian government was overthrown. The best government Germany ever had was destroyed. The Austro-Hungarian Empire ceased to exist, the British were financially exhausted and lost a generation of leaders, and the Versailles Treaty imposing war guilt on Germany was so shameful and impractical that it produced World War II, which finished off the European powers.

Suppose some government had criminalized doubting German guilt for World War I. We might today have no idea of the true story. So, what are we to make of the German government's criminalization of skepticism of alleged war crimes?

What are we witnessing here? Is the German government enacting legislation to protect war propaganda from skepticism? Is the purpose of the law to make it impossible to understand the Ukraine conflict as anything but a Russian war crime? Is the German government determined, by preventing any examination and presentation of the evidence, to blame Russia, just as the German government blames Germany for World War II?

More generally, throughout the Western world, White ethnicities are blamed for racism and slavery of people of color, charges they are not permitted to challenge. An assertion against a White ethnic is considered a conviction.

Now we come back to the new German law against denying war crimes. The law provides no criteria for deciding who—and what process in whose hands—establishes the responsibility for declaring war crimes that are true by diktat. In other words, it is nothing but a propagandistic law to apply to whoever the West wants demonized, sanctioned and overthrown.

The Western world in the past rested on open debate and presentation of evidence to decide truth. Those days are behind us. Today truth is declared from above and ensconced in official narratives that cannot be challenged. Truth is now "misinformation." ❖

TWO FAKE WAR CRIMES IN ONE!

In the ludicrous anti-German propaganda poster shown here, not only are snarling and grotesque German soldiers holding up a baby spiked on a bayonet, in the background of the falsified scene is the infamous "Canadian soldier nailed to a cross," yet another myth created by war propagandists to demonize WWI Germany. In the center of the poster, it appears that the German military man leading the way may himself be the Kaiser! Such absurd lies were believed by millions at the time. What if we weren't allowed to challenge the "official" line on history? The lies of the victors would be codified as authentic history.

Combatting "Anti-Semitism"

In the wake of "anti-Semitic" comments made by Kayne West, the popular rapper now known as Ye, leading officials in the Biden administration launched a roundtable meeting with a number of top Jewish groups where the "rising tide of anti-Semitism" was characterized as "an epidemic of hate facing our country." Chaired by Douglas Emhoff, the Jewish husband of Vice President Kamala Harris, the roundtable featured Special Envoy to Monitor and Combat Antisemitism Deborah Lipstadt and Susan Rice, director of the Domestic Policy Council, among other top officials in the Biden White House. Described as a "first-of-its-kind White House summit on anti-Semitism" by JewishInsider, a leading publication within the Jewish community, the roundtable highlighted the growing demand by the organized Jewish community for a coordinated national strategy to "combat anti-Semitism," which essentially amounts to any discussion of anyone who is Jewish. Representatives from the Anti-Defamation League, the American Jewish Committee, the Jewish Federations of North America, the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, and at least 10 other organizations were present at the closed-door meeting.

Going to Hell for "Denial"

Dennis Prager, a leading conservative intellectual and commentator who is also a rabid Zionist proud of his Jewish heritage, published an unusually unhinged op-ed in early December titled, "If Holocaust Deniers Don't Go to Hell, There is No God," demonstrating the utter hysteria that exists when it comes to the sacrosanct "Holocaust" narrative and anyone questioning or disputing the officially accepted dogma. "In the pantheon of evils, among the worst is Holocaust denial," Prager argued, before insisting that those who question the authorized "Holocaust" story will go straight to hell "if there is a just God." Many critics and dissidents, including Jewish author Norman Finkelstein, have argued that the "Holocaust" story has essentially become the new religion for many contemporary Jews. After reading op-eds like the one authored by Prager, it is difficult to dispute that contention.

Unending "Mafia-Style" Racket

Ingrida Simonyte, Lithuania's current prime minister, recently introduced a bill in the Seimas, Lithuania's legislature, that would allocate nearly $38 million to "Holocaust" survivors and their heirs. According to the Jewish Telegraphic Agency, the bill "would nearly double the money the government had already set aside for restitution claims in a country where 90% of Jews were killed in the Holocaust." Over 10 years ago, Lithuania dedicated nearly $72 million for the Good Will Foundation, an organization managed by the Foundation for Lithuanian Jewish Heritage which receives and distributes money from the central Lithuanian government for "projects which deal with religious, cultural, health care, sports, educational and scientific goals pursued by Lithuanian Jews in Lithuania," according to its official website. The new legislation would allow so-called survivors and their heirs to apply for compensation for personal property allegedly stolen, seized or destroyed during WWII, a key goal of the Jewish World Restitution Organization, an international mafia-style racket that shakes down European governments for money on behalf of "Holocaust survivors."

Germany Arrests 25 "Terrorists"

In early December last year, nearly 3,000 German law enforcement officers participated in 150 operations in 11 of the 16 states in Germany, resulting in the arrest of 25 individuals said to have been involved in a plot to overthrow the German government, according to the BBC. Many of those arrested were reportedly involved with the Reichsbürger movement in Germany, a group that has long been targeted by German intelligence and law enforcement. Known as the Citizens of the Reich, members of Reichsbürger do not recognize the legitimacy of the post-WWII German state. According to German authorities, the plotters, which included a former member of parliament, former military officers, and a low-level aristocrat, aimed to overthrow the government and install a former member of the German royal family as ruler in a newly organized state. Interior Minister Nancy Faeser described those arrested as "the enemies of democracy" and vowed to continue the investigation. One wonders if undercover operatives or informants played a role in pushing or even organizing the alleged seditious plot, as is commonplace in the U.S.

Record NDAA Passed

Just before TBR went to press, the House of Representatives approved the largest ever National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA), an annual bill that sets policy and spending priorities for the Pentagon and the U.S. defense budget. The House voted overwhelmingly to approve the bill (350-80), far surpassing the two-thirds majority required to pass the measure, which outlines priorities and initiatives for the Department of Defense. The bill will go to the Senate where it is expected to be approved before heading to the White House for Biden's signature. The NDAA for fiscal year 2023 authorizes $858 billion in defense and military spending, which includes more money and military support for Taiwan and Ukraine—countries being used as proxies by the U.S. in its geopolitical struggle against China and Russia respectively—as well as funding for the purchase of military equipment and a 4.6% pay raise for U.S. military personnel, Reuters reported. The $858 billion price tag is roughly $45 billion more than requested by the Biden White House. Where exactly all this money will come from and how it will impact the inflationary pressures on the U.S. economy has yet to be determined.

Orwell Free Speech Award 2022

In early December last year, Lady Michele Renouf, a long time dissident and supporter of the Revisionist cause, presented the annual George Orwell Free Speech Award for 2022 to Alfred Schaefer, a German-Canadian dissident who was finally released from German prison in July 2022 after spending nearly four years behind bars for publicly challenging the official "Holocaust" narrative. Alfred and his sister Monika, who was also imprisoned in Germany and who has recently published a book currently available from TBR describing the Schaefer's persecution and experience with the German legal system, are powerful champions of the Revisionist cause. Even after spending four years behind bars, including over a year in solitary confinement, Alfred continues to be an outspoken proponent for free speech and thought, much to the chagrin of the powers that be in both Canada and Germany.

"Person of the Year" Named

Shocking absolutely no one, TIME magazine, a once respectable publication, named Volodymyr Zelensky, Ukraine's Jewish president, as it's "Person of the Year" for 2022. Zelensky has been a darling of the Western media and political establishment since the Russian invasion of Ukraine began in February of last year. Edward Felsenthal, TIME magazine's Jewish editor-in-chief, argued that Zelensky galvanized "the world in a way we haven't seen in decades," which was largely due to the Western media's fawning coverage of Zelensky in its ongoing information war against Russia. In reality, Ukraine has systematically persecuted opposition political parties and media outlets since Zelensky came to power, while continuing its assault on the largely Russian-speaking people of the Donbass region in eastern Ukraine, which sought independence from the ruling regime based in Kiev. As TBR goes to press, it is estimated that at least 100,000 Ukrainian military men and tens of thousands of Russians have lost their lives in the senseless and entirely avoidable bloodshed.

The Biden administration and the Kremlin reached a deal in early December whereby the accused Russian arms dealer and businessman Viktor Bout would be released from prison in exchange for Brittney Griner, an American professional woman's basketball player arrested in Russia on drug possession charges earlier this year. Bout was serving a lengthy prison sentence after being taken into custody in a sting operation in Thailand in 2008. He was sentenced in 2012 after being convicted in a New York court on charges of terrorism and conspiring to kill U.S. nationals, according to the U.S. Justice Department..

Israel's Samson Option and Potential Nuclear War Scenarios

By Marc Roland

"I am Death, the mighty Destroyer of the World, out to destroy. If the splendor of a thousand suns was to blaze out all at once in the sky, even without your participation, all the warriors standing arrayed in the opposing armies shall cease to exist." From The Bhagavad Gita, "The Song of the Lord", Chapter 11, Verses 31-33, 5th Century B.C. Hindu scripture.[1]

Not since the Cuban missile crisis of 60 years ago has the world edged closer to atomic war. That confrontation in October 1962 was internationally negotiated from the brink of nuclear Armageddon.[2] But the present conflict in Ukraine is more perilous because it is nonnegotiable: Both Russia and NATO, from opposing points of view, regard the fate of Ukraine as an existential matter, thereby creating an impasse from which there is no diplomatic exit. But a silent player sits in at this high-stakes match-game, an old swindler holding a card that could trump Vladimir Putin's hand with a global conflagration.

Potential for that doomsday cataclysm rests at the present moment with nine countries pointing 13,080 nuclear weapons at one another.[3] Russia and the United States possess most of them, but a decisive trip-hammer is touched by Israel's itchy trigger-finger. It is known there as b'rerat shimshon, named after the herculean biblical figure, who pushed apart the pillars of an enemy temple, where he had been imprisoned, allowing the roof to collapse in on himself and his enemies, killing everyone.[4] The "Samson Option" refers to a deterrent strategy of massive retaliation with nuclear weapons. It is not directed solely at invaders threatening the residents of Israel, but, in their own words, against the entire outside world and the rest of humanity.

Seymour Hersh, above, is one of America's leading investigative journalists. Of Jewish heritage himself, Hersh wrote The Samson Option: Israel's Nuclear Arsenal and American Foreign Policy in 1991, exposing Israel's nuclear policy.

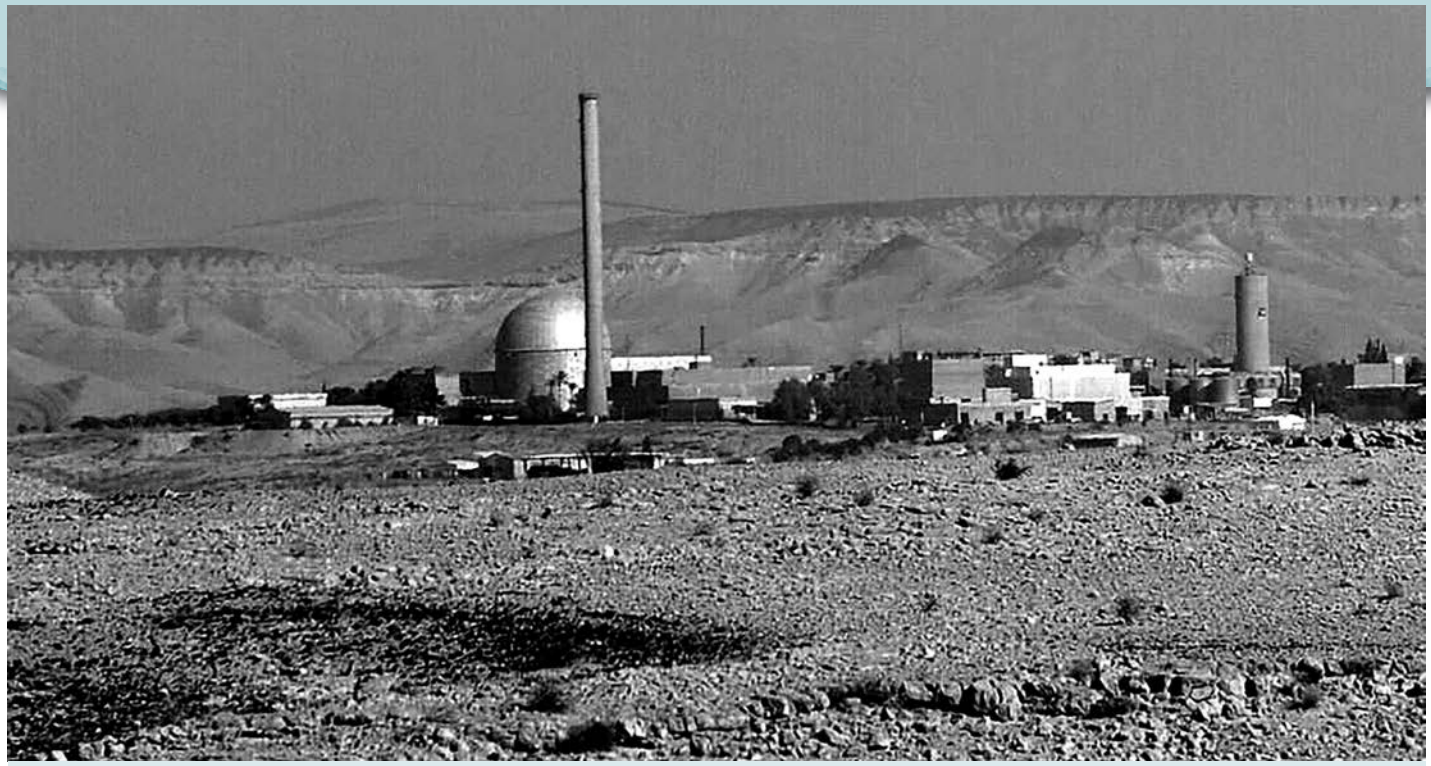
"We possess several hundred atomic warheads and rockets," claims Martin van Creveld, a professor of military history at Israel's Hebrew University, "and can launch them at targets in all directions, perhaps even at Rome [the capital city of an Israeli ally]. Most European capitals [and staunch allies of Israel] are targets for our air force. We have the capability to take the world down with us. And I can assure you that that will happen before Israel goes under."[5]

In a 2002 article published by the Los Angeles Times, David Perlmutter, a Jewish professor who also serves as the director of the School of Journalism and Mass Communication at Louisiana State University, wrote:

> What would serve the Jew-hating world better in repayment for thousands of years of massacres but a Nuclear Winter? For the first time in history, a people facing extermination, while the world either cackles or looks away—unlike the Armenians, Tibetans, World War II European Jews or Rwandans—have the power to destroy the world. The ultimate justice?[6]

Apparently, mankind is not allowed to live without Israel and the Jewish people.

The Jewish-American historian Ron Rosenbaum writes how, in the "aftermath of a second Holocaust," Israel could "bring down the pillars



Israel's original nuclear research facility, above, was built secretly in the Negev desert near the city of Dimona with French assistance, completely outside the inspection process and protocols of the International Atomic Energy Agency. Today it's called the Shimon Peres Negev Nuclear Research Center, and Israeli officials have always claimed their nuclear program was strictly for agricultural and research purposes. Israel is one of the only countries in the world that has refused to sign the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.

of the world (attack Moscow and European capitals, for instance)," as well as the "holy places of Islam."[7]

A former Israeli official, "who has firsthand knowledge of his government's nuclear weapons program," according to Pulitzer Prize-wining investigative journalist Seymour Hersh, himself a Jew, told Gentiles, "We got the message. We can still remember the smell of Auschwitz and Treblinka. Next time, we'll take all of you with us."[8]

Itamar Yaoz-Kest, an Israeli poet and self-styled "Holocaust survivor," warned, "If you force us yet again to descend from the face of the Earth to the depths of the Earth—let the Earth roll toward the Nothingness," a reference, as Gil Ronen saw it, to the Samson Option, which The Jerusalem Post journalist described as "taking out Israel's enemies with it, possibly causing irreparable damage to the entire world."[9]

As such and, as the name infers, the Samson Option is not confined to a miniature state in the Near East, but much more. "Israel" is understood as the whole Jewish people, everywhere on Earth. Accordingly, large-scale aggression against a Jewish community anywhere constitutes an attack on the broader, worldwide concept of "Israel," or "Greater Israel." Who can say what Israeli officials might consider "a second Holocaust" to justify triggering a global Holocaust of their own?

A harrowing example exists at this very moment in Eastern Europe. Ukraine has a very large Jewish population—approximately 360,000 to 400,000 persons, making it the eighth most numerous after the United States, Israel, France, Canada, Russia, the West Bank, and the United Kingdom.[10] There are 110,000 Jews in Kiev, the Ukrainian capital, alone.[11] If a ground offensive against Ukraine undertaken by Putin's armed forces claimed significant Jewish casualties, even collaterally rather than deliberately, government officials in Tel Aviv could feel justified in activating the Samson Option against targets inside Russia.

Doubtless, this is a contingency already under serious consideration by high-ranking Israeli politicians and military officers, if not the general population. Their Jericho III is a triple-stage, solid propellant inter-continental ballistic missile (ICBM). Carrying a payload from over 2,200 pounds to nearly one and a half tons, with a range of 2,982 to 7,180 miles, it is capable of delivering an atomic warhead to any target across Russia.[12] Israel is said to possess and operate 263 Jericho IIIs.[13] As soon as their attack course has become clear, a Russian retaliatory strike against Israel would prompt counter-launches from the United States, unleashing a full-blown nuclear exchange.

Leaders in the Kremlin have quite a similar version of the Samson Option, when their entire missile arsenal is automatically triggered into an irreversible launch sequence.[14] Although most of its ICBMs target the United States, American military analysts are confident that only four to six of them would actually pass through our defenses, demolishing as many urban areas, resulting in at least 12 million dead and three times the number injured.[15] Even so, it is difficult to imagine an aerial shield virtually impermeable enough to mostly filter out the rain of 3,000 to 4,000 missiles falling simultaneously across America. So, with the Samson Option, all mankind must perish.

This is no Judgment Day fantasy, but a very real possibility currently under grim discussion by military strategists everywhere. "Our armed forces," van Creveld boasts of Israel's nuclear potential, "are not the 30th strongest in the world, but rather the second or third."[16]

How in God's name did humanity arrive at this stupidly suicidal and supremely abysmal state of affairs? The answer, like so many others pertaining to the slide of Western civilization from its preeminent high culture toward an evolving dystopia, lies in history's most decisive turning-point, World War II. Its misbegotten offspring was modern Israel. Doubtless, had that conflict turned out differently, the instigative Zionist state would have never been born. Instead, immediately following Europe's "Alamo of the Aryan race," ancient plans were set in motion for transforming the theft of Gentile Palestine into world Jewry's corporate headquarters based in Tel Aviv.[17]

From the moment America's first operational atom bomb killed 126,000 Japanese civilians at Hiroshima in 1945, and three years before Israel even existed, Israel's first prime minister, David Ben-Gurion, together with his fellow founding fathers, swore by Yahweh's beard to outfit themselves with their own atomic armory. It would not be an easy task.

World opinion, appalled by the specter of thermonuclear war looming in the postwar era, necessitated strict secrecy and covert action, especially as international agreements for nuclear nonproliferation and even disarmament were being drawn up. Atomic energy research was expensive. Ben-Gurion and other Israeli leaders realized that they needed big money, and lots of it, to afford the scientists, equipment, facilities, heavy water and uranium necessary for developing a nuclear bomb.

From the start, it was confidentially financed by U.S. and European Jews often attending synagogue, where fundraising could be safely conducted in the shadows of religious activity.

From that point on, De Gaulle was kept in the dark about Israeli weaponization of the atom.

"American Jews were Israel's lifeline," Hersh explains. "Hundreds of millions of American dollars were pouring in every year."[18] In a short time—only months, in fact, after Israel was founded—Israeli physicists were participating in joint research with their French colleagues at the Commissariat à l'énergie atomique et aux énergies alternatives (CEA), or the Alternative Energies and Atomic Energy Commission, located in Paris.

United Nations inspectors were shocked and suspicious when they learned of foreign nuclear scientists at work in France but were assured by the Israelis that their only interest in atomic energy was its purely agricultural application.

The gullible Americans swallowed this bold-faced lie whole, going so far as to finance and fuel Israel's first nuclear reactor at Nahal Sosq, south of Tel Aviv, where the country's premier atomic warheads were designed.

One year after the Israelis arrived in Paris, they were alarmed when the United States, United Kingdom and France vowed to mutually deny military assistance of all kinds to the Middle East, for fear of igniting a wider war at that immemorial hot spot. The Tripartite Agreement meant that American, British or French citizens who contributed to any Middle Eastern armed forces were in violation of the agreement and subject to arrest and punishment, including deportation of convicted non-citizens.

French President Charles de Gaulle not only disavowed CEA cooperation with the Israelis, but demanded that their laboratories be shut down, and forbade further French assistance. His orders were ignored. He was thereafter kept in the dark about Israeli weaponization of the atom with the invaluable help of their Paris collaborators, who illegally supplied them with uranium ore and reactor parts, minus international inspection, as required by international law.

While many of these "French" partners in crime were Jewish, most were not, though all of them passionately believed Israel deserved and needed the atom bomb. When U.S. government officials got wind of Franco-Israeli collusion and brought it to de Gaulle's attention, CEA spokesmen dismissed it as a ludicrous, anti-Semitic conspiracy theory because the Zionists were said to have been interested in manufacturing better agricultural chemicals, nothing more. The same lie was soon after repeated by Ben-Gurion to calm anxious members of the Knesset, who were hearing disturbing rumors to the contrary.

No longer able to risk working at the supposedly deactivated CEA facilities in Paris, the French fellow travelers relocated eight miles outside the remote city of Dimona, 22 miles west of the Dead Sea in the Southern District of Israel, where, due to its relative isolation in the desert, ground was broken for the Negev Nuclear Research Center. It was not long thereafter, however, that the Franco-Israeli honeymoon began to sour.

"The French on the job at Dimona," Hersh writes, "were also a source of turmoil." He continues:

> Hundreds of French engineers and technicians had begun pouring into the Negev [Desert], in 1957. … Housing was also made available to the thousands of North African Jews (or Sephardim) who immigrated from Morocco and Algeria, hired to do the digging and building of the reactor and reprocessing plant. European Jews were slowly and carefully recruited from government and private businesses throughout Israel to serve as scientists and bureaucratic managers; they too were provided with housing in Beersheba.
> There was a caste system in the desert, and the French were on top, as they repeatedly made all too clear. "The French were arrogant," said one Israeli who spent part of his career at Dimona. … Some of the French officials were openly anti-Semitic, the Israeli recalled, and one—eventually ordered out of Israel—was found to have collaborated with the Nazis during World War II.
> The French treatment of the Jews from North Africa who had been hired as laborers was even worse, the Israeli added: "They would speak of Jews from Algeria and Morocco like they were stones—inferior beings. It was Nazi-like."
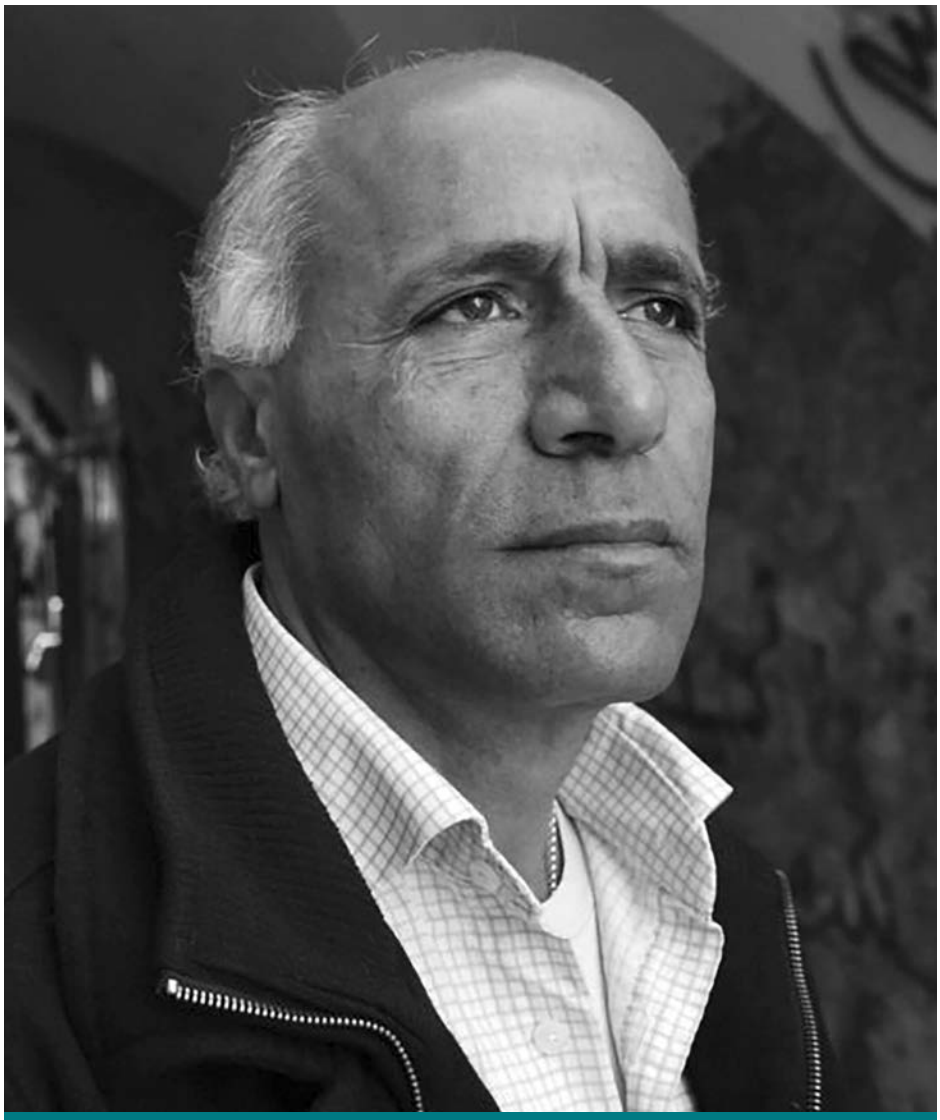
> Even those Frenchmen who were Jewish did little to ease the tension; many considered themselves to be of a different class and social standing than their less sophisticated Israeli colleagues. Ironically, the Algerian and Moroccan Jews also were mistreated by their Israeli employers. … The North African Jews were "treated like slaves" by French and Israelis alike.

By the mid-1960s, the disenchanted French left the Negev Research Center, never to return. "Abraham Sourassi, one of the senior Israelis at Dimona



Mordechai Vanunu: Israeli Patriot

Mordechai Vanunu was born in 1952 to an Orthodox Jewish family in Marrakesh, Morocco. His family emigrated to Israel where he would become a nuclear technician at the Negev Nuclear Research Center in 1976. He enrolled at Ben-Gurion University of the Negev in Beersheba a few years later, where he developed left-wing views and an opposition to nuclear weapons proliferation. In the mid-1980s, Vanunu would leak information, photographs and personal testimony concerning his work-related activities at Israel's nuclear facility, exposing Israel's nuclear deception and pursuit and possession of nuclear weapons. He would later be set up in a "honeypot" trap and was abducted by Israeli intelligence in Rome in 1986, where he was quickly transported back to Israel to face trial on numerous charges, including treason. He ultimately spent nearly 18 years in prison, much of it in solitary confinement, and was released in 2004, though he is still constantly monitored and forbidden from leaving Israel.

… endeared himself to his countrymen by declaring, 'Good riddance'."[19] The scorned and disaffected French were never credited by their ingrate benefactors for having made Israel's atom bomb possible from its beginning.

The slack was taken up and actually anticipated and preceded by other foreigners, like Raymond Fox, who "had created high-level consternation [among his nuclear research colleagues] by emigrating to Israel in 1957 from California where he had access to weapons design information at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, the nuclear research facility operated at the University of California for the Atomic Energy Commission. Fox's secrets could be invaluable to the Israelis at Dimona."[20] Fox was joined by other Jewish physicists from America, Canada and Great Britain.

Their clandestine project faced its most serious challenge in 1961 with a major shift in U.S. government priorities directed by John F. Kennedy after entering the White House. Horrified by the prospect of a thermonuclear exchange, the chief focus of his administration included: non-proliferation of atomic weapons; a halt to their further development; international inspections for limiting their mass-production; an end to their testing; and marginalizing the dangerous potential for their deployment by improving relations between contentious countries through peaceful resolutions.

After the Central Intelligence Agency brought photographs to Kennedy's attention, he was horrified. Their imagery suggested that Dimona's Negev Nuclear Research Center was engaged in the development of an atomic bomb.

William R. Crawford, a U.S. Foreign Service officer and director of Israeli affairs, recounted, "This was very hot stuff. It was as if there was no previous information [there was none, as far as Kennedy knew, because he had only been told that Israel's tiny nuclear reactor was strictly limited to agricultural matters], as if the whole thing was a total surprise to the White House, intelligence community, and so forth. We decided that this was not what Israel was telling us."[21]

Kennedy immediately dispatched a letter to Ben-Gurion, in which he stressed that America's worldwide position on nonproliferation would "be compromised if a state regarded as being dependent on us, as is Israel, pursues an independent course." Kennedy made "a demand for inspection and the right to convey the results to [Gamal] Nasser," the then-Egyptian president and Arab nationalist.

"The idea was," Hersh explained, "to reassure the Egyptian president that Dimona was not a weapons plant and to prevent Egypt from beginning its own nuclear research. The inspection of Dimona was to be carried out by an independent team of experts from the International Atomic Energy Agency, the nuclear safeguarding agency based in Vienna."[22]

> JFK reluctantly decided to pay Ben-Gurion's price for a look inside the Dimona plant.

The gist of Ben-Gurion's long, repetitive, and rambling reply was that Dimona's doors were forever closed and locked to nosey IAEA inspectors. Outraged by such arrogant defiance, JFK ordered the CIA to launch a spy raid into the Negev Nuclear Research Center. The attempt was successfully blocked at the facility's defensive perimeter.

Kennedy was at a loss what to do next, until Ben-Gurion himself agreed that Dimona was open for inspection, as soon as Israel was provided with batteries of America's latest MIM-23 "Homing-All-the-Way Killer" missile—the Hawk missile, for short. This state-of-the-art surface-to-air missile would give Israel a qualitative edge over its Arab enemies, but the sly prime minister's offer put Kennedy in a diplomatic bind. His policy had been to equally refuse weapons to all Mideast governments, without exception, because that area of the world had too much potential for conflict that could easily spill over to other parts of the world.

After long deliberation, he reluctantly decided to pay Ben-Gurion's price for a look inside the Dimona plant: Keeping a thermonuclear bomb away from the Israelis seemed better than risking another war fought between them and their neighbors with conventional weapons. U.S. overseas policy had nonetheless been intimidated, coerced and ultimately dictated by a foreign power. It would not be the last time.

Nor would the Israeli wheeler-dealers—traditional past masters at diplomatic slight-of-hand—concede anything, unlike the Americans with their magnanimous concessions. As Abe Feinberg, Kennedy's liaison to the Israelis, admitted decades later, "They gave him a scam job."

Hersh explains:

> The American inspectors—most of them experts in nuclear processing—would be provided with a Potemkin village and never know it.[23] … A false control room was constructed at Dimona, complete with false control panels and computer-driven measuring devices that seemed to be gauging the thermal output of a 24 megawatt reactor (as Israel claimed Dimona to be) in full operation.
> There were extensive practice sessions in the fake control room, as Israeli technicians sought to avoid any slips when the Americans arrived. The goal was to convince the inspectors that no chemical reprocessing plant existed or was possible.
> One big fear was that the Americans would seek to inspect the reactor core physically, and presumably discover that Dimona was utilizing large amounts of heavy water—much of it illicitly obtained from France and Norway—and obviously operating the reactor at far greater output than the acknowledged 24 megawatts. It was agreed that the inspection team would not be permitted to enter the core "for safety reasons."

Another aspect of the cover-up was made much easier by the fact that none of the Americans spoke or understood Hebrew. One former Israeli official recalled that his job was to interpret for the American team.

"I was part of the cover-up team. One of the engineers would start talking too much in front of the Americans," the official said, and he would tell him, in seemingly conversational Hebrew, "Listen, you mother, don't answer that question!" The Americans would think I was translating.[24]

Satisfied with their inspection, they reported to Kennedy that Dimona was incapable of producing a nuclear weapon. Six years later, in early 1968, the plant gave Israel the bomb. Since then, it has not been detonated, but has been used to intimidate the outside world.

A case in point occurred during the Yom Kippur War in 1973, when a coalition of 12 Arab states threatened to overwhelm Israel. In a failed counterattack on October 8, the Israelis lost 73 tanks—mostly destroyed, but some captured—within a matter of minutes. A panicking Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir ordered Simcha Dinitz, Israel's ambassador to the United States, to put through a telephone call to the White House for emergency military aid in the form of McDonnell Douglas F-4 Phantom II interceptors.

President Richard Nixon truthfully replied that he lacked the Congressional authority to honor such a request, because treaty obligations with all Middle East nations forbade America from arming any one of them. After Dinitz responded that a precedent had already been set, when then-President Kennedy dispatched Hawk missiles to Israel in a similar situation 11 years earlier, Nixon pointed out that

Then-Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir, left, is photographed with then-President Richard Nixon, right, in 1973 at the White House. Meir served as Israel's fourth prime minister from 1969 to 1974, becoming the country's first and only woman to head the government. Born in Kiev in 1898, then a part of the Russian Empire, she moved to Wisconsin with her family in 1906. After getting married, she and her husband emigrated to what was then the British Mandate of Palestine, which eventually became the state of Israel in 1948. Always a staunch Zionist and labor advocate, Meir and her husband joined a kibbutz upon arriving in Palestine in the early 1920s. In 1934, she joined the Executive Committee of the Histadrut, the General Organization of Workers in Israel, the leading trade union in the country, and eventually became the head of its political department. She would go on to play a leading diplomatic role in post-WWII Jewish refugee resettlement in Israel, raising money for Jews to emigrate to Israel and ultimately became a leading political player in the emerging Jewish state. She was one of 24 signatories of Israel's Declaration of Independence in May 1948 and would go on to serve as labor secretary and foreign minister before becoming prime minister.

the anti-aircraft MIM-23s had been defensive, not offensive weapons like the F-4 fighter-bombers.

Unimpressed and impatient, Meir put Israel on full nuclear alert for the first time in its checkered history and activated the country's officially non-existent atomic arsenal. She "used that alert to blackmail Washington into a major policy change" by having Dinitz warn the president of "very serious conclusions." With that, Nixon made an about-face by ordering the Phantoms air-lifted without delay to Tel Aviv.

Hersh quotes an American defense analyst, who said, "It is terribly dangerous to stop Israel from doing what it thinks is essential to its national security"—even, apparently, for the chief executive of the United States.[25]

Today, Israeli government authorities still neither confirm nor deny their possession of nuclear weapons. To even discuss the possibility in Israel is punishable by imprisonment. Before any article so much as skirting the issue is published in Israeli newspapers or magazines, it must be first scrutinized and cleared by military censors.

"Can the world afford to pretend that Israel is not a nuclear power," Hersh asks, "because to do otherwise would raise difficult issues? Can any international agreement to limit the spread of nuclear weapons be enforced if Israel's bombs are not fully accounted for? Can the Arab nations truly be expected to ignore Israel's possession of atomic weapons simply because the weapons are not publicized? Should Israel, because of its widespread and emotional support in America, be held to a different moral standard than Pakistan or North Korea," both nuclear powers?[26]

The future of all mankind may well depend upon the answers to these questions, now made daily more uncertain by events in Ukraine. ❖

State of Israel Driving Multiple Ethnic Cleansing Operations in Holy Land, Across Mideast

Review & Analysis by Antonius J. Patrick

A review of Stephen M. Rasche, The Disappearing People: The Tragic Fate of Christians in the Middle East (New York: Post Hill Press, 2020) and Ilan Pappe, The Ethnic Cleansing of Palestine (London: Oneworld Publications Limited, 2007; reprint 2018).

INTRODUCTION

The Middle East is home not only to the first great civilization—Mesopotamia, "the land between two rivers," the Tigris and Euphrates—but, more importantly, it was where mankind's Savior began and completed His redemptive mission in ancient Palestine. Mesopotamia, which saw the appearance of such human inventions as the wheel, a writing system, the concept of time, a calendar, astronomy, and a law code, included modern day Iraq and Kuwait in addition to parts of Iran, Syria, and Turkey.

Most of ancient Mesopotamia is now Iraq, which was created in 1920 by the British Mandate for Mesopotamia. Modern Iraq, like most of the Middle East, was of little importance to the wider world until the creation of the Jewish state of Israel in 1948. Ever since, there has been constant turmoil and strife, most of which has been caused by Israel, often drawing world powers into the conflicts.

ILAN PAPPE

Ilan Pappe is currently the Director of the European Center for Palestine Studies and Professor of History at the University of Exeter in the UK.

The U.S.-led invasion of Iraq in 2003 not only destroyed the country's economy and infrastructure, but the ouster of Saddam Hussein, who ruled over a relatively stable multi-cultural and religious population, tore the country apart.

The groups worst affected by the chaotic conditions, yet the least spoken about by the press and Western policymakers, are the Christian communities of northern Iraq.

After Barack Obama's promised withdraw of U.S. troops from Iraq in 2014, ISIS (the Islamic State, a militant offshoot of al Qaeda and the CIA) began attacking and pressuring Christian communities, mostly in the north. Some of these persecuted peoples' ancestors lived there as far back as the 1st century A.D., but that matters not. Today, Christians are being intimidated and forcibly removed from their ancient enclaves, most never to return. This population loss—not only in the northern region but all across Iraq—has been so severe that Christianity could completely disappear in the not-too-distant future.

The sad story of the displacement of Iraqi Christians and other religious minorities from Iraq is the subject of Stephen Rasche's book The Disappearing People: The Tragic Fate of Christians in the Middle East.

It is unlikely that the destruction of Iraq, the depopulation of its Christian communities in that country as well as throughout the region, or the continual unrest and mayhem that has characterized the Middle East for the past 75 years would have taken place had the Jewish state of Israel not been created. The first unfortunate people to feel the wrath of Israel's aggression were the Palestinians, Christian and Muslim alike. Their displacement from their land and the creation of Israel in 1948 has been courageously chronicled by Ilan Pappe in The Ethnic Cleansing of Palestine.

Christians in the Middle East, not unlike those in the photo above, have faced severe persecution, particularly since the founding of Israel and America's disastrous, Zionist-oriented regime-change operations following 9/11. A study in 2017 carried out by Dar al-Kalima University in the Israeli-occupied West Bank found that Israel's occupation of Palestine is the "main factor behind the exodus" of Christians. "The pressure of Israeli occupation, ongoing constraints, discriminatory policies, arbitrary arrests, confiscation of lands added to the general sense of hopelessness among Palestinian Christians," the study noted.

While Disappearing People should be widely dispersed and read, Ethnic Cleansing is more essential since it provides the background and cause for why there is so much upheaval, not only among the vanishing Christians of Iraq, but throughout the entire region. Both books, however, will shatter any preconceived notion of the situation in the Middle East and, more than likely, leave one incensed about what has taken place, especially since it has been Western inaction—Great Britain—or action—the United States—that has led to the creation of Israel and its continued existence as a terroristic state.

DISAPPEARING PEOPLE

There is probably no American who has had more first-hand knowledge to discuss conditions of Iraqi Christians than Stephen Rasche. Rasche was educated at Boston University, received a Juris Doctor degree from the University of San Diego and, over the past two decades, has spent considerable time, often in extremely dangerous situations, on the ground in Iraq assisting the country's Christian communities. During the 2014 ISIS uprising, he was officially a staff member of the Chaldean Catholic Archdiocese of Erbil, which is in the northern section of the country. He has also given congressional testimony of his experiences in Erbil.

The author gives an account of his official duties:

> I held a brief with significant responsibilities in the stabilization and restoration of the Christian towns of Nineveh, as they were slowly freed from the grip of ISIS. During this time, I lived with and among the priests and people of these ancient communities.
> My ability to move about in the country, and be effective, lay in large measure to the low-profile manner I had adopted over many years of working in the region. (xviii-xix)

Rasche wrote the book because:

> The sand has nearly run out in the hourglass that is Christianity in Iraq. Many of the other Christian communities of the Middle East are not far behind. And although there is still time left for small remnants of hope, if they are not acted upon now, this history of 2,000 years will see its final chapters in our lifetimes—much of it perhaps even within this coming decade. (xix)

The book is not a history of the decline of Christianity in Iraq, but "is meant to show what the situation has been and still is for the remaining Christians of Iraq and, in a more anecdotal sense, for the Christians of the Middle East." (166)

Rasche mostly blames ISIS for the attacks on and the displacement of Christians and other minority groups and leaves out any longer-term historical factors. He does, however, repeatedly criticize U.S. policymakers for their failure to provide aid to the threatened Christian communities.

Rache rightly blames the U.S. invasion of Iraq and the toppling of Saddam as the primary cause for the decline and persecution of the Christian population in the country. Although no fan of Hussein, he admits that Christians, as well as the other religious minorities, such as the Yazidi, were far better off under the Hussein regime than what they experienced after its ouster. The "anarchy" that followed, which was accurately predicted and warned about by those who opposed American intervention, has tragically played out.

Although beyond the scope of the book, an aspect that should have been mentioned by the author was the overwhelming influence of American neoconservative Zionists in the George W. Bush administration and its policy toward Iraq. Israel-first neocons such as Paul Wolfowitz, Richard Perle, William Kristol, and Robert Kagan, who were closely aligned with Benjamin Netanyahu and the Likud Party, convinced the younger Bush to destroy Iraq in fulfillment of their cherished "Greater Israel" project. These neocon war hawks are ideological decedents of the murderers and terrorists which set up the state of Israel in 1948, robbing the Palestinians of their land and property. Most of the Palestinians not murdered were forcibly relocated to the Gaza Strip or the West Bank, condemned to live out a miserable existence in an open-air prison. Others fled to neighboring Arab states, where shoddy refugee camps sprung up as the displaced Palestinians struggled to maintain their very existence.

It has been estimated that the number of Christians in Iraq prior to U.S. military intervention was 1.5 million and, by the time of the book's publication, that number had dwindled to a half million. Christians had either been killed, disappeared or simply left for destinations outside of Iraq. Naturally, under such chaotic conditions, the reproductive capacity of families has fallen, adding to the demographic implosion.

> No U.S. funds have been used in Iraq for displaced religious and ethnic minorities to rebuild their homes.

Things would have been worse—if that is even possible—had it not been for the Chaldean Catholic Archdiocese, private charities such as the Knights of Columbus, and the intense faith of Iraqi Christians that allowed them to persevere despite incredible sufferings. Rasche, who worked alongside the clergy, praises their efforts and courage in attending and protecting their flock against, in many cases, lethal opposition.

No government or international agency has been able to provide much aid or assistance to besieged Iraqi Christians save one—Hungary. As of 2014, aid from Hungary and non-governmental groups amounted to $26 million, far short of what was needed for rebuilding the abandoned and destroyed Christian communities.

While the Chaldean Church and charities did all they could, international agencies and governments were of little help either deliberately or through bureaucratic bungling. In congressional testimony in 2016, Rasche stated that "throughout this entire crisis, other than initial supplies of tents and tarps, the Christian community in Iraq has received no funding from any U.S. aid agencies or the UN." (xxi)

The reason for the lack of U.S. and international aid has been that funds had to go through the UN and, since the church and private charities had done so well in support of Iraqi Christians, the UN's "Individual Needs Policy" could not be applied. Thus, Christian communities did not have access to international aid. Since October 2017, the U.S. claims to have spent $340 million in Iraq but most has gone to infrastructure and building up the Iraqi state and none to displaced religious and ethnic minorities to resettle and rebuild their communities.

There was great hope among Iraqi Christians that the Trump administration would provide at least some assistance. In the end, however, Mr. Trump failed miserably. As he did with most of his campaign promises and policy endeavors, he declared victory before the battle was over.

The president's front man in Iraq was then-Vice President Mike Pence. The vice president promised that U.S. aid would flow directly to the displaced peoples. Such talk buoyed the hopes of Iraqi Christians. Pence, however, could not deliver and, for many Iraqis, this was the last straw as thousands fled their homeland permanently.

Pence apparently was well aware of the precarious situation of Christians and proposed to directly fund religious minorities through faith-based groups. In a 2017 speech, he asserted that, "While faith-based groups with proven track records and deep roots in these communities are more than willing to assist, the UN too often denies their funding requests. My friends, those days are over." (145) And, prior to visiting Iraq in 2018, Pence's office released the following statement:

> President Trump and Vice President Pence made restoring the rights and property of Iraq's Christian and Yazidi communities a top and unceasing priority. The vice president will not tolerate bureaucratic delays in implementing the administration's vision to deliver the assistance we promised to the people we pledged to help. (146)

Rasche believes, however, that, ultimately, the blame falls on America's chief executive at the time. Pence had secured funding for aid, and all that was needed was an executive order to make the transfer a reality. Despite Trump's issuance of dozens of these mandates throughout his tenure, none came for Iraqi Christians. Rasche speculates about why it was not issued but has no firm conclusion. It may have been that monies given to faith-based groups had constitutional impediments concerning separation of church and state or, more likely, Jewish-Zionist factions within the Trump administration did not like the idea of giving assistance to Christians.

ISIS AND IRAN

Exactly who ISIS is, how it came about, and who backed it financially is not delved into by the author although he places most of the blame for the latest round of Christian persecution at its feet. Rasche takes ISIS at face value and lumps it under the umbrella of "radical Islam," ignoring compelling evidence that U.S. and foreign intelligence agencies have been instrumental in ISIS's origins, development and sustenance. There is also no mention of Israel's role in the Islamic State's activities.

Besides ISIS, Rasche blames Iranian-backed forces for the terror and disruption of the Christian communities. He lumps the Iranian proxies as "Islamo-Fascists" who cannot be negotiated with and are driven solely by sectarian considerations.

Rasche's analysis leaves out the fact that Iran and Iraq are bitter enemies who fought a destructive war throughout the 1980s. It had been reported that Iran lost 1 million people in casualties. The U.S., of course, backed then-Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein with military hardware, making the conflict even more lethal.

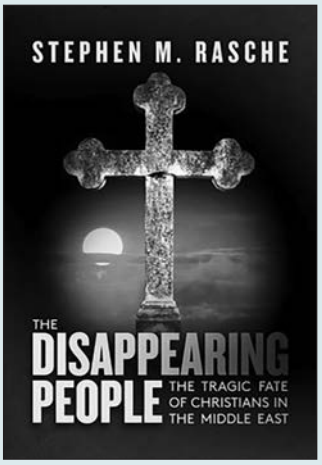
ETHNIC CLEANSING OF PALESTINE

Dr. Harry Elmer Barnes, the namesake of this magazine, coined the phrase "historical blackout" explaining how academia, the press, book publishing and the electronic media silenced World War II Revisionists back then. Eventually, those who questioned the origins of that conflict were able to break through and, after many years, have made inroads against the official narrative of the war.

Perhaps an even more effective blackout has been imposed surrounding the genocidal events which took place in Palestine in 1948. Despite the establishment of the United Nations and human rights organizations and institutions after WWII, as well as the emergence of the internet and social media decades later, knowledge of the mass murder and land grab committed by the Zionists remains largely unknown and highly suppressed.

It is not likely that The Ethnic Cleansing of Palestine would have seen the light of day or would have received any mainstream reviews if the author was not Jewish. Despite his ethnic background, Pappe courageously presents an honest and well-documented account of the grisly episode and pulls no punches nor makes excuses as to who was to blame for the Palestinian holocaust:

> In this book, I want to explore both the mechanism of the 1948 ethnic cleansing and the cognitive system that allowed the world to forget and enabled the perpetuators to deny the crime the Zionist movement committed against the Palestinian people in 1948. (xvi)



The Disappearing People: The Tragic Fate of Christians in the Middle East

By Stephen M. Rasche. The tragic story of the looming end of Christianity in the Middle East. For 1,400 years, the Christians of the Mideast lived under a system of sustained persecution as a distinct lower class of citizens under their Muslim rulers. Despite this systemic oppression, Christianity maintained a tenuous—even sometimes prosperous—foothold in the land of its birthplace up until the past several decades. Yet today, Christianity stands on the brink of extinction in much of the Mideast. How did this happen? What role did Western foreign policy and international aid policy play? What of the role of Islam and the Christians themselves? How should history judge what happened to Christians of the Mideast and what lessons can be learned? This book examines these questions with firsthand accounts of those who are living it. Hardback, 208 pages, #890, $27. minus 10% for TBR subscribers plus $5 S&H inside the U.S. from TBR, P.O. He continues:

> It is the simple but horrific story of the ethnic cleansing of Palestine, a crime against humanity that Israel has wanted to deny and cause the world to forget. (xviii)

While Pappe gives a detailed account of how the Zionists accomplished their dastardly objectives, he does not delve into the whys and ultimate motivation for their actions. He is thus perplexed as to how those who witnessed the mass murder of Palestinians were indifferent to their plight even though they themselves had been persecuted or had family members displaced. An example of this is Golda Meir's reaction to the Haifa massacres:

> When Golda Meir, one of the senior Zionist leaders, visited Haifa a few days later, she at first found it hard to suppress a feeling of horror when she entered homes where cooked food still stood on the tables, children had left toys and books on the floor, and life appeared to have frozen in an instant. Meir had come to Palestine from the United States, where her family had fled in the wake of pogroms in Russia, and the sights she witnessed that day reminded her of the worst stories her family had told her about Russian brutality against Jews decades earlier.
> But this apparently left no lasting mark on her or her associates' determination to continue with the ethnic cleansing of Palestine. (95)

To look for motivations one would have to consult thinkers such as Dr. William Luther Pierce and Dr. Kevin MacDonald for a secular perspective, and from a religious standpoint the works of Father Denis Fahey and Father Charles E. Coughlin should be read. What these writers contend is that the Jewish religion preaches that Jews should consider themselves superior to all other people. Thus, any action or polices they pursue against non-Jews can be justified since they are convinced they are "chosen people of God." This mindset has been woven into the Jewish consciousness and continues to this day.

Thus, the reaction of Golda Meir, the brutal liquidation of the Russian tzar's family or the countless other genocides, atrocities and crimes committed in the name of Judaism can be comprehended.

No matter how they have attempted to spin their actions—either by claiming it was in self-defense, the land was devoid of people or because of the need for a "homeland" to escape future persecutions—the Zionist cleansing of Palestine was a premeditated plan which had the deliberate intention of driving the Palestinians—Christians and Muslims alike—off their land through acts of murder, terror, and intimidation. Without outside help from the West or the disorganized and pathetic Arab states, the Palestinians had little chance and the Zionists accomplished their wicked agenda with amazing rapidity.

Pappe does not excuse the Zionists for their murderous actions in the ethnic cleansing of Palestine.

Once the decision was made, within a half a year of Israel's founding, the Zionists had completed their mission with the following results:

- Half of the Palestinian population (about 800,000) had been uprooted
- 531 villages had been destroyed
- 11 urban neighborhoods had been emptied of inhabitants

Pappe's comment on the above numbers is quite apt: "The plan decided upon on March 10, 1948, and above all its systematic implementation in the following months, was a clear-cut case of an ethnic cleansing operation, regarded under international law today as a crime against humanity." (xiii)

JEWISH-LED MASSACRES

Ever since WWII, the world has been inundated by Court Historians and Zionist propagandists about the persecution, suffering, and deaths of the Jews which took place before, during and after that conflict. An entire industry—movies, television programs, books, academic courses, music, plays, literature, museums, public ceremonies and commemorations—has been constructed around the supposed deliberate destruction of European Jewry by the German National Socialists. No other genocide, persecution, ethnic cleansing or suffering of peoples in the annals of man can even come close to their suffering during this period, according to their version of history.

The mythology of the "6 million" has given cover not only to Zionist political aspirations in the Middle East and to those living in Occidental countries, but it has also been used to justify the acts of violence and atrocities committed by Israel during its founding and those done up to this very day. Although Pappe goes along with the Holocaust narrative, he does not excuse the Zionists for their murderous actions in the ethnic cleansing of the Palestinians.

Yet, it was European and American leaders, blinded by Zionist propaganda, who gave the "green light" for the conquest of Palestine and the expunging of its people to Zionist murderers and thugs. Pappe rightly points out: "But worse was to come as Europe prepared to compensate the Jewish people for the Holocaust that had raged on its soil with a state in Palestine, ignoring at the same time this could only come about at the expense of the indigenous Palestinians." (26)

Not only was the establishment of an exclusively Jewish state in Palestine sold as a way to prevent future holocausts, but to arouse sufficient hate among Zionist sympathizers. Palestinians were compared to the Germans and the crimes they allegedly committed against the Jews in WWII:

> The attempt to portray Palestinians, and Arabs in general, as Nazis was a deliberate public relations ploy to ensure that, three years after the Holocaust, Jewish soldiers would not lose heart when ordered to cleanse, kill and destroy other human beings. Already in 1945, Natan Alterman, the national poet of the Jewish community, had identified the impending confrontation with the Palestinians with the war against the Nazis in Europe. (72)

Probably the worst case of Zionist-conducted genocide was at the pastoral village of Deir Yassin, which was situated on a hill west of Jerusalem close to the Jewish neighborhood of Givat Shaul. The description of the atrocities committed by the Zionist armed forces and security teams can only be understood as diabolical:

> As they burst into the village [Deir Yassin], the Jewish soldiers sprayed the houses with machine-gun fire, killing many of the inhabitants. The remaining villagers were then gathered in one place and murdered in cold blood, their bodies abused while a number of the women were raped and then killed. (90)

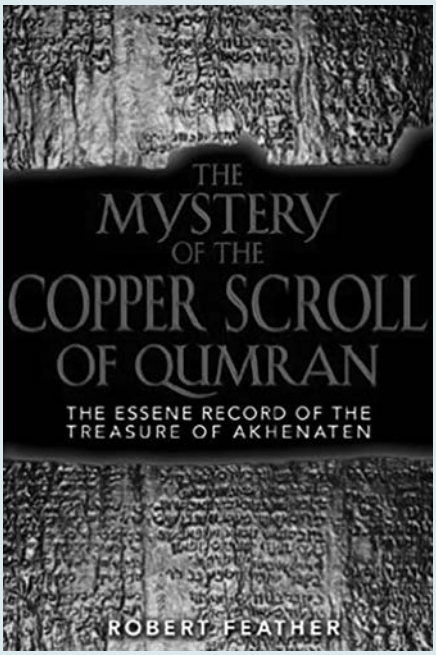
A young Palestinian at the time, who luckily escaped the slaughter, recalled the horrific scene:

> They took us out one after the other; shot an old man and, when one of his daughters cried, she was shot, too. Then they called my brother Muhammad, and shot him in front of us, and, when my mother yelled, bending over him—carrying my little sister Hudra in her hands, still breastfeeding her—they shot her, too. (Ibid)

Similar atrocities took place in both rural areas and urban centers, most infamously Haifa, Safad, Acre, Baysan, Sirin and even in the "Phantom City" of Jerusalem.

The Mystery of the Copper Scroll of Qumran

The Essene Record of the Treasure of Akhenaten



Introduces a radical new perspective on the historical foundations of monotheism, based on the enigma of the Copper Scroll of the Essenes. The famous Dead Sea Scrolls comprise the oldest collection of Biblical documents ever discovered. Of the Dead Sea Scrolls, none has baffled experts more than the 2,000-year-old Copper Scroll, discovered in 1952 by a team of Bedouins led by Henri de Contenson. Appearing to be a list of buried treasure engraved on copper pieces, the Copper Scroll is considered to be the work of a secretive Jewish sect of devout Essenes, who lived by the Dead Sea around the time of Jesus. No one has been able to explain its meaning or discover any of the 64 locations where the Biblical treasures it lists were buried. Robert Feather, combining his background as a metallurgist with his journalistic expertise, offers a fascinating study that takes the reader on a journey from ancient Mesopotamia, through Canaan, into Egypt, and back to the shores of the Dead Sea. His exploration links the scroll to the ancient Egyptian king Akhenaten, confirming a long suspected influence of this pharaoh's religious beliefs on those of the Hebrews. The author's findings not only reveal the locations of most of the treasures listed on the Copper Scroll, but they also point to a radical new understanding of the origins of monotheism—the basis of the three great religions of Judaism, Islam, and Christianity. Jewish Extremists Attack Christian Sites in Holy Land Assaults on churches and other Christian religious sites and shrines by right-wing Jews in Israel have continued to raise concerns about radical and highly fanatical Zionist factions and their increasingly aggressive tactics. Here, a nun surveys damage from the fire at the Church of the Multiplication of the Loaves and Fishes in northern Israel, by tradition the place where Jesus performed the miracle of feeding the large crowd starting with but a tiny quantity of food. Jewish extremists sprayed graffiti on parts of the building reading in Hebrew: "False idols will be smashed." A deliberate arson attack carried out by Jewish terrorists on a Catholic church on the shores of the Sea of Galilee caused nearly $1.8 million in damage just a few years ago.

CONCLUSION

Like the destruction of Iraq and later persecution of its Christians, the Jewish state of Israel would have never become a monstrous reality had it not been for Western support—first with Great Britain and its Balfour Declaration pledging support for a Jewish state in Palestine and, later, with America's massive and unwavering financial, military and political assistance. Most of the world was against the establishment of Israel, rightly fearing that the region would become one of incessant conflict and bloodshed. Even Israel's original supporters and enablers probably never dreamed of the horrific consequences that would take place in its aftermath.

The overwhelming influence that Zionists have had over the U.S. government, television, the press, entertainment and academia was enough to get America's support and allow for the cleansing of Palestine of its rightful inhabitants.

Placing the blame for such an atrocious, unjust situation, however, should not be exclusively reserved for the Zionists. Instead, blame should also be laid at the feet of Western politicians and policymakers who have supported Israel while closing their eyes to the genocide in Palestine and the eradication of Christianity in Iraq and throughout the Middle East for which the Jewish state has been responsible.

Disappearing People and The Ethnic Cleansing of Palestine should raise the indignation of their readers. If things are ever to be turned around, these books and others of their kind need to be widely read and distributed. Until then, life in Iraq, Palestine and throughout the Middle East will continue to be under the suzerainty of Israel and its vassal protectorate, the United States. ❖

THE MOST TABOO TOPICS . . .

End Times Warfare: The Eschatological Beliefs of the Great Religions

By Hervé Ryssen. Eschatology is the study of "End Times" doctrines. All three of the great monotheistic religions—Judaism, Christianity and Islam—contain a belief that the world was created by God, and that this world must come to an end. This theme of the end times and the coming of the Messiah are also found in Judaism, as well as in Islam, which also draws its inspiration from the Old Testament. Yet, these three religions are completely incompatible. Why? For the pure and simple reason that their vision of the future diverges on this fundamental point: At the end of time, one—and only one—religion is to triumph. In the end, the religion whose goals are the clearest and faith most ardent will win. Softcover, 189 pages, #855, $25.

Jewish Ritual Murder: An Anthology —Volume 1

Volume One of the two-volume JEWISH RITUAL MURDER ANTHOLOGY SERIES begins with Julius Streicher's Der Stürmer Special Ritual Murder issue and continues with Cardinal Lorenzo Ganganelli's Report, Walsh's Isabella of Spain, Neophytos's A Testimony of Ritual Murder and I.I. Lyutostansky's On the Use of Christian Blood by the Jews, with a few smaller items of interest. Volume One: Softcover, 467 pages, #933, indexed, $30.

Jewish Ritual Murder: An Anthology—Volume 2

Volume Two of the two-volume JEWISH RITUAL MURDER ANTHOLOGY SERIES contains: My Irrelevant Defence by Arnold Spencer Leese, A Short Demurrer by William Prynne (1600-1669), two articles from La Civiltà Cattolica, a fragment from the novel The Brothers Karamazov by Fyodor Dostoyevsky, Murdered by Jews by Henri Desportes (an account of the revolting murder of a little Christian boy in Damascus, never published in English before this), and two articles by late American writer Harold Covington. The volume concludes with another exclusive translation of Jewish Ritual Crime by Albert Monniot (1862-1938). In this famous work, Monniot puts to rest the standard counter-arguments of critics—and more. This includes information on the poisoning of Roger Gougenot des Mousseaux, another famous French murder investigator. Volume Two: Softcover, 424 pages, #934, $30.

The Jew, the Gypsy & El Islam

Sir Richard F. Burton (1821-1890) was the co-discoverer of the source of the White Nile and British consul at multiple cities across the globe. He was one of the most important linguists of his day. This book is a republishing of his valuable 1898 book The Jew, the Gypsy and El Islam. It consists of three extended essays that Burton had been working on for many years prior to his death. The essay "The Gypsy" is a good exposition of a people that are nearly invisible, their machinations mostly undetected. "El Islam" is of obvious topical today. The chapter "The Jew," reproduced exactly as published in 1898, however, reflects barely one-quarter of the original manuscript, which is now kept locked in the archives of the Board of Deputies of British Jews. Softcover, 215 pages, #809, $20.

The Life & Miracles of St. William of Norwich

Was an innocent boy in 12th-century England brutally murdered by bloodthirsty fanatics? This book is the full manuscript of Benedictine monk Thomas of Monmouth who, in A.D. 1173, chronicled the murder of William of Norwich. Thomas claimed William, a 12-year-old tanner's apprentice, had been ritually murdered by Jews in contempt of the Christian faith. It's the first such account, specifically that of Jewish ritual murder of a child, in the historical record. This edition is complete and unabridged as translated by Cambridge academicians Jessopp & James in 1896. Softcover, 170 pages, indexed, #939, $20.

Jewish Ritual Murder: An Investigation

By Hellmut Schramm, Ph.D. Completed in 1941 and published 1943-1944 in Germany during the National Socialist regime. Many of the accounts carry the semblance of verity in that they expose Christian accomplices in the procuring of children for ritual sacrifice. The bodies of the victims were often disposed of in a way that would actually tend to allow their easy discovery. The perpetrators did this because burying the bodies would have given them respect. This book forms an enduring legacy which has now been brought to English readers and which can no longer be suppressed. Softcover, 477 pages, indexed, #810, $30.

The Murder of Andrei Yushchinsky

By G.G. Zamyslovsky. Shortly before WWI, the Russian Empire was shaken by the bestial murder of Andrei Yushchinsky, a 13-year-old boy whose exsanguinated body, bearing all the traces of ritual murder, was found in March 1911 on the outskirts of Kiev. The ensuing trial, held in 1913, attracted attention not only in Russia but also in Europe and the U.S. Mendel Beilis was the ony defendant. Although he was acquitted, the verdict insisted it was a ritual murder—committed in a Jewish brick factory. The book also includes a detailed account of two famous ritual murder trials that took place in Velizh and Saratov in the 19th century, plus the expert opinion of Fr. I.B. Pranaitis. Softcover, 486 pages, #940, $35.

Father James Keller and His Crusade Against Communism

By Mike Mains

Regular readers of The Barnes Review are undoubtedly familiar with Father Charles Coughlin, a Catholic priest whose fiery sermons on America-first populism resonated over the nation's radio waves in the 1930s. But how many readers have heard of Father James Keller and the organization he founded dedicated to fighting Communism called The Christophers?

Father Keller was a Catholic priest, ordained on August 15, 1925, although, according to his autobiography To Light a Candle, he almost didn't become a priest. Like many young men, Keller was confused about his place in the world and what path his future should take. So, at the age of 18, he quit the seminary he was attending to manage a family-owned candy store in San Francisco.

Keller made an immediate success of the job and, if not for a chance encounter with a customer, he likely would have remained in the candy business for the rest of his life. The customer that played such a monumental role in Keller's life was a priest named Father Ryan.

Keller felt compelled to introduce himself and did so. He told Father Ryan of his former years in the seminary and his decision to quit. Then he asked the priest if he had made the right decision. In words that would sear themselves into Keller's memory, Father Ryan responded, "No, I'm not going to take it on my conscience to tell you not to go back to the seminary! After all, in God's plan, there may be thousands of people whose salvation depends on what you may do for them as a priest."

FATHER JAMES KELLER
Warrior against Communism.

Those words had a profound effect on Keller and would act as a guiding principle for the remainder of his life. He returned to the seminary and, after his ordination, he joined the Maryknoll Order, a missionary organization founded in 1911. Maryknollers were known for landing in rough, hostile areas where they established beachheads of Christian teaching and charity, thus earning the name "Marines of the Catholic Church."

MISSIONARY TO THE WORLD

In 1928, Father Keller embarked on his first missionary expedition for Maryknoll, an ocean voyage from San Francisco to the South Pacific, Australia and Asia. Immediately, Keller found he was not a first-class sailor, becoming seasick within hours of leaving port.

A successful businessman and friend named Mark Foy came to the rescue in Australia, providing Keller with a generous financial donation for Maryknoll's missionary work, along with a personal gift—a packet of Mothersill's famous seasick pills. Keller was instructed to take one pill before sailing and a second pill an hour later. An hour after setting out to sea, the steward delivered a cable to Keller. It was from Foy and read: "Time for your second pill."

Keller was impressed with the people of Batavia, Java, now known as Jakarta, the largest city in Indonesia. Slightly built and brightly dressed, the Javanese smiled shyly at the priest and touched him with their kindness as he strolled through the local marketplace, dressed in clerical black. When Keller's ship set sail again and he related the experience to his fellow passengers, an American woman said in a huff, "When I go to a new country, I don't waste my time in marketplaces or watching dirty people. I'd rather spend it seeing the beautiful homes and gardens."

The woman's words stuck with Keller. He considered her attitude representative of humanity's greatest challenge, the responsibility each person has to love his neighbor.

In Hong Kong, the young priest visited a leprosarium and was startled to find 200 leprosy patients being cared for by a single French priest and three Canadian nuns. Even more surprising were the smiles on the patients' faces, despite being hideously distorted, many of them missing eyes or noses.

A diminutive woman, 83 years old and in the last stages of the disease, greeted Keller on her knees with the words, "Tin jee po yau, sen foo." ("God bless you, Father.") The woman was shrunken and gnarled, her face a shapeless blob, but when Keller blessed her, she looked up at him and smiled.

In Shanghai, the priest visited an orphanage run by Sister Elizabeth Praschma. Sister Elizabeth had been in Shanghai for 16 years and would remain there 39 years. She told Keller how her staff went out daily to pick up abandoned infants whose parents had left them in doorways and alleyways to perish. Baptizing those infants who were on the verge of death before they perished was a daily task. Others were nursed back to health.

Keller asked how many infants they had baptized over the years. Sister Elizabeth said, "I'm afraid I don't know. Maybe 12,000 or 15,000 a year." Keller did the math in his head and calculated that, in the 16 years Sister Elizabeth had been in Shanghai, she'd saved the souls of nearly 200,000 infants, sending them ahead of her to Heaven.

While traveling through China, young Keller was witness to the devastating effects Communism had wrought throughout the country. When he returned to the United States, he began lecturing on the topic, stressing how Communist leaders instilled a sense of personal mission in their followers. Keller recommended Christians embody the same sense of personal mission. After one of his talks, a young woman said, "This is the first time in my life that I have really understood what the missionary side of our church is all about."

Keller was transferred to New York where he continued lecturing, always telling his audience, "No matter what your individual circumstances and surroundings may be, you—you individually—can leave the world better for your having been in it."

TO LIGHT A CANDLE

To raise funds for Maryknoll's missionary work, Keller thought of producing a benefit concert. He thus met with Earle Lewis, assistant manager of the Metropolitan Opera House (the Met). When Keller arrived at the Met, the huge auditorium was pitch black, but Lewis, while crossing the stage, lit a single match.

The sight of that tiny flame made an indelible impression on Keller and reminded him of the Chinese proverb: "It is better to light one candle than to curse the darkness." That little saying became the guiding principle for the remainder of Keller's life and led to his forming an organization in 1945 called The Christophers. The name comes from the Greek word Christóforos, which means "bearer of Christ." The goal of The Christophers was to combat Communism through Christian principles.

From that point on, Keller's work expanded. Articles and books led to radio, television and movies. Keller likened the experience to dropping a pebble in a pool: "The circles just went on widening outward by themselves."

Hollywood stars William Holden, Bing Crosby, Jack Benny, Ann Blythe, Irene Dunne, Loretta Young and others all volunteered their services to assist Keller in the creation of a movie based on his most famous and important book You Can Change the World. Imagine trying to recruit today's Hollywood crowd to appear unpaid in an anti-Communist film that promotes Christian values.

Father Keller continued his battle against Communism all through the 1950s, '60s, and '70s, inspiring millions of others to do the same, until his death in 1977. It is, however, unclear whether or not Father Keller accepted the subversive changes brought by the Second Vatican Council in 1968.

YOU CAN CHANGE THE WORLD

"Did you ever stop to think that the United States is being effectively undermined by less than 1% of the people of our country, of whom only a portion are Communists?" Those are the words that open You Can Change the World. They were written in 1948, but are as relevant as ever.

Today, we have a tiny, infinitesimal percentage of the population controlling the entire country. They are the ones putting violent rioters on the streets, promoting transgenderism and the mutilation of children, pushing Critical Race Theory and forcing their strange brand of "sex education" on little kids in the schools. They are the ones controlling political discourse in our country and silencing (cancelling) anyone who disagrees with them. They are the ones trying to rig our elections and they have no qualms about resorting to dishonesty or even to violence to attain their goals. And they are getting away with it.

How? They get away with it because they are organized and possess no morality in their goals or in the tactics they employ. They get away with it because they center their work in the four key areas of influence that Father Keller outlined in his book, namely: education, government, labor, labor management and writing (e.g., newspapers, magazines, books, movies, television, internet etc.). That is the Communist way.

Father Keller's solution to defeating Communism, the solution he called the Christopher approach, was simple. He wrote: "It is our conviction that 1% of the normal, decent citizens of America can be found who are willing to get into the mainstream of American life as Christophers and work as hard to restore to it the divine truth and human integrity as the other 1% are striving furiously to eliminate these values."

In other words, Father Keller urged Americans to light a candle in the darkness—to do whatever they could from their own unique place in life to promote Christian principles, combat Communism and make the world a better place. Like the Communists themselves, Keller urged Americans to go into one of the four key spheres of influence: education, government, labor/labor management and writing. Wrote Keller, "Most good people are taking care only of themselves while most evil people are taking care of everyone else."

You Can Change the World is a manual for everyday Americans, especially those not aware of the vital role they can play in reversing the downward spiral of the country and of Christianity itself.

Father Keller's books are by no means perfect. He has some unflattering things to say about Germany and the German people. And he makes reference to "our Judeo-Christian values" (an oxymoron). However, one must take into account the time period in which his books were written. There was no internet in 1948. News and information about the world was severely limited and censored then. And being a Catholic priest, Father Keller was almost certainly limited to newspaper stories and radio broadcasts in his quest for knowledge.

If you decide to read any of Father Keller's books, I suggest getting the originals, published from the 1940s through 1960s. You Can Change the World was revised and reissued after Keller passed away, but with the majority of the book's most important content left out. ❖

By David Skrbina, Ph.D.

For many years now, amidst my various research and readings, I would come across occasional critical references to the Jews of Europe. People would cite, almost in passing, older essays or books that challenged Jewish dominance or critiqued some particular social or moral aspect of the Jews.

Some of the authors were well-known—Richard Wagner, Fyodor Dostoyevsky—but others were obscure: Osman Bey (whose real name was Frederick Millingen) or Wilhelm Marr, for example. Many were German, but some, like Edouard Drumont, were French. Yet others were Italian, as with a series of three articles by the Catholic journal Civilta Cattolica or certain essays by the noted American poet Ezra Pound. The critiques frequently dated to the late 1800s or early 1900s, a time when critics of Jews could still write with relative honesty and relative freedom from persecution (unlike today). It was also a time for which I had little knowledge of what the Germans have long called "the Jewish Question."

The titles of these critical works were intriguing: "Jewry in music" (by Wagner), "The conquest of the world by the Jews" (by Bey), "Jewish France" (by Drumont). I wanted to read more. But I quickly realized that such works were not easy to find. In some cases, general searches turned up nothing. Sometimes I found the foreign-language originals, but those were not much help. Other times I found excerpts or long quotations, but I was clearly missing the context and the larger argument. And often frustrating was the fact that the translations, when I found them, were poor—mangled English, or archaic "British-English," or crude literal translations that were very awkward to read. Clearly, I thought, someone can do a better job than this.

Classic Essays on the Jewish Question

Softcover, 370 pages

The Barnes Review

Now, thankfully, someone has done better. Here's an outstanding new book entitled Classic Essays on the Jewish Question: 1850 to 1945 from the intrepid publisher Clemens and Blair. In one stroke, this new book solves all the problems cited above. It collects all these hard-to-find pieces into a single work; it provides new (or at least revised) English translations that are highly readable; and it provides, wherever possible, the complete unedited essays (full books, like that of Drumont, obviously had to be excerpted).

In all, the book offers 16 entries, arranged chronologically, from the time period 1850 to 1945. I would be remiss if I didn't mention them all:

- Jewry in Music, by Richard Wagner (1850)
- The Conquest of the World by the Jews, by Frederick Millingen (1875)
- The Jewish Question by Fyodor Dostoyevsky (1877)
- The Victory of Jewry over Germandom by Wilhelm Marr (1879)
- Jewish France by Edouard Drumont (1886)
- The Jewish Question in Europe, published by the Catholic journal La Civilta Cattolica (1890)
- Questions and Answers by Theodor Fritsch (1893)
- First Letter on the Jews by Adolf Hitler (1919)
- The Core of the Jewish Question by Theodor Fritsch (1923)
- A Real Case against the Jews/ Commissary to the Gentiles by Marcus Eli Ravage (1928)
- The SS as Anti-Bolshevist Combat Organization, by Heinrich Himmler (1936)
- The Jews and This War by Ezra

Pound (1940)

• International Melting Pot or United Nation-States of Europe? by Robert Ley (1941)

• Germany Must Perish! by Theodore N. Kaufman (1941)

• The War-Goal of World Plutocracy by Wolfgang Diewerge (1941)

• Never! by Heinrich Goitsch (1944)

The essays are crisp and compelling. They are directly on target and, in this translation, they read very well. The editor Dalton makes a number of technical corrections along the way: "Jewry in Music" instead of "Judaism in Music," for example, and the real name of Frederick Millingen instead of the pseudonym Osman Bey. All entries have concise introductions, and all are sprinkled with helpful notes.

There were several highlights here for me personally. Wagner's essay, initially published way back in 1850, provides an astonishing anticipation of Jewish domination in the arts and culture. And part two of his essay, written in 1869, describes in remarkably familiar detail how he was targeted by the Jews for his critical stance, and how he was all but "cancelled" by them. Some things never change, it seems.

Millingen's "The Conquest of the World" and Marr's "Victory of Jewry" are virtual statements of surrender. It is hard to believe that, already by the 1870s, effective mastery over Europe had been attained so quickly by non-Christians. But Millingen and Marr make strong cases.

The longest of the essays is the three-part "The Jewish Question in Europe," penned by an anonymous Catholic researcher in 1890. It is an impressive and well-researched essay, one that targets Jewish corruption in traditionally Christian Europe.

Here we see the classic Catholic anti-Semitism come to the fore. As the editor Dalton says, "It stands as one of the strongest and most potent Catholic critiques of the past two centuries."

Perhaps to circumvent accusations of bias, Dalton has seen fit to include two entries by Jews: Marcus Ravage's "Real Case" and Theodore Kaufman's "Germany Must Perish!" The Ravage piece outlines an early version of the "Jesus hoax" concept, and Kaufman's entry—originally published in 1941 as a small booklet—caused huge consternation in Germany with its call for sterilization of the entire German population after the war. Talk about genocide! No one does it better than the chosen ones.

One other gem was the piece by a relatively unknown National Socialist, Robert Ley. His essay is a blistering attack on Jewish behavior. Written in 1941 when things were still going well for Germany, this piece by Ley tries to convince German workers that their future depends on defeating what he believed was the "Jewish enemy." It is a call-to-arms from a top government official—the likes of which are nearly unimaginable in the present day West.

In the end, this book reminds me of the old saying: The more things change, the more they stay the same. The Jews one reads about here, from 100 or 150 years ago, remind me of the Jews we see today in media, in business and on the nightly news. The issues are the same, and the methods are the same. One sees the same viciousness, the same vengefulness and, indeed, the same hatred. Look what they did, for instance, to Kanye West for daring to talk about taboo topics to a large audience.

In this volume you will hear about brute power-grabbers and materialistic money-grubbers using elevated status and new-found power to attack Western, Christian culture and society and anyone who stands in their way.

The final third of the book outlines the causal Jewish/Zionist role in WWII, from a German perspective that one literally never encounters these days. And this is perhaps the final lesson of this lesson-filled book: that the masters of the world will stop at nothing to further their interests, up to and including world war. Mass death means little to them, as long as it advances their interests. And this is a message one would do well to heed in the present day. ❖

Populist Canadian Diplomat, Statesman Remembered

RIP Ian Verner Macdonald (1925–2022)

By Paul Fromm

Canada lost an outstanding free speech warrior, historical Revisionist, and free thinker on June 28, 2022, with the death of Ian Verner Macdonald, well into his 99th year. A true patriot all his life, he served in the Royal Canadian Air Force and Royal Navy Fleet Air Arm during WWII and had a lifelong love of aviation. With degrees in economics from Queen's University and the University of Toronto, he aced the Foreign Service Exam, placing second nationwide, and then went on to a career as a trade diplomat that took him officially to over 50 countries.

His numerous and unprecedented career accomplishments made him arguably the most productive trade official in Canadian history. Always a Canada firster, in the mid-1960s he urged taking advantage of trade opportunities with the increasingly wealthy Arab world. After six foreign postings on five continents, he was appointed chief of planning and policy for export development, a position in which he was able to propose programs and policies based on practical experience that would greatly improve the efficacy of government assistance to Canadians seeking to do business abroad.

Macdonald also strongly recommended cultivation of the lucrative and receptive Arab markets where he had been assured by top-level officials and businessmen that Canada, because of its perceived independent, non-partisan foreign policy, was their trading partner of choice. Much to his dismay, Canadair reported that the sale he had negotiated for a supply of jet trainers to the sultan of Oman's air force had been vetoed by the Department of Foreign Affairs (DFA), an affront to Sultan Said bin Taimur that cost Canada heavily in prospective earnings. More importantly, his high-level discussions to train and equip the embryo Saudi air force, for which a $400 million down payment was offered, likewise failed to receive support in Ottawa and was never consummated.

IAN MACDONALD
Tireless Canadian activist.

To add to the folly, his Mideast and North African trade policy proposals, no matter how astute and prescient, were opposed furiously by an influential foreign-affiliated lobby (with several moles in the DFA and the ear of the minister) who intervened to have the policy advisor summarily dismissed from foreign service for his audacious devotion to duty. Macdonald was tricked out of what would have been an easily won appeal of his wrongful dismissal by a false promise of reinstatement "as soon as the heat from the Jewish lobby dies down" on condition he neither appeal nor seek outside assistance. Because of his well-founded suspicion of foreign intrigue, he contacted the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) Security Service (and subsequently the Canadian Security Intelligence Service), only to find that they were not interested.

So ended his chosen career.

Macdonald—a military veteran with rich diplomatic experiences, journalistic training from Wayne State University in Detroit, and a keen understanding of history—was drawn to study the history of World War II. He produced hundreds of iconoclastic treatises on the war, Mideast politics and history. He wrote numerous published articles and was the subject of articles written by others on his outspoken patriotism and unflagging efforts to expose subversion and corruption in government.

In the spring of 1987, he recruited a 96-member Canadian delegation to attend an international peace gathering called by Col. Muammar Qaddafi to commemorate the previous year's U.S.

attack on Tripoli and Benghazi in which the president's two-year-old daughter was killed along with dozens of others. Macdonald had assembled the delegation on behalf of the government of Libya, with which he had remained in contact since 1972 through Libya's UN ambassador.

The conference was infiltrated by Libya's enemies intending to stage an "ugly incident" to discredit the proceedings, the main target of which would be Macdonald, the high-profile organizer of the Canadian delegation.

When Macdonald was able to evade the planned assassination thanks to a tip, the only journalist on the mission (the perceptive, insightful young Christoph Halens from the Ottawa Citizen newspaper, a graduate of the Carleton University School of Journalism eager to make his mark by covering the conference) tragically became the alternative victim.

With the Libyan outrage in mind, Macdonald vigorously petitioned the Commissioner of the RCMP, the DFA and the Belgian Embassy to investigate the subsequent murder by Israel of Canadian scientist and inventor Dr. Gerald Bull (who had contracted his services to the government of Iraq and was assassinated in Brussels) but without effect, despite the availability of the prime witness (Victor Ostrovsky, a former Mossad agent) in Ottawa.

Macdonald continued to be the victim of attempts to impoverish him and otherwise crush his spirit, including several death threats, none of which had been successful, however disconcerting. Two of his houses were destroyed by arson, and a third seriously damaged.

Macdonald was convinced Canada was being betrayed by cabalistic powerbrokers and venal politicians dedicated to trashing our priceless British-French heritage while competing to sacrifice the country's birthright and sovereignty for personal gain.

He feared that Canada today is no longer a respected, confident, homogeneous, independent, Christian union but is becoming increasingly a dispossessed, demoralized, turbulent, unstable, lobby-driven, multicultural, multiracial, Godless, leaderless, confused, disintegrating, Americanized polyglot, essentially without national character, without cohesion, without historical integrity, without pride and without common purpose.

Macdonald wrote thousands of crisp, well-documented letters to editors on forbidden topics like Zionist influence in public policy, Canada's failed immigration policies and a reconsideration of Canada's role in WWII. Almost none appeared in Canada's "free" press. They have been circulated on the internet and many will appear as part of a book being prepared for publication. On January 14, 2010, the Canadian Association for Free Expression honored him with a freedom award at a luncheon in Toronto, citing his "lifetime of dedication to freedom of speech and the preservation of our people."

Intellectually active to the end, Macdonald practiced Rudyard Kipling's advice to his son "to fill the unforgiving minute with 60 seconds worth of distance run." May Ian Macdonald, a righteous son of Canada and a tireless champion for truth and justice, rest in peace. ❖

Hollywood Has Been Pushing 'Diversity' Since the 1940s

By James Edwards

Anyone interested in the origins of "diversity" and "multiculturalism" in America—codewords for fewer White people and the systematic promotion and elevation of non-Whites and other sexual and ethnic minorities—should watch a short film called The House I Live In. Starring Frank Sinatra, it came out in 1945, and was created "to oppose anti-Semitism and racial prejudice." It was awarded both a Golden Globe and an Academy Award in 1946.

The plot is pretty simple. Sinatra, playing himself, heads outside for a cigarette break in the middle of a recording session where he happens upon a gang of about a dozen young boys chasing and cornering another kid, getting ready to pummel him. Sinatra intervenes, asking what the trouble is. The ruffians explain that they want to beat the kid up because they don't like his religion. One tells Sinatra, "He's a dirty…"—but Sinatra cuts him off before he can finish the sentence.

Sinatra then has a talk with the boys and shows them how wrong they are. Does he tell them that, while religion is important, going around beating up people with a different religion is not appropriate behavior? No, Sinatra cuts right to the chase. In one of the most memorable scenes of the movie, he tells the boys: "Look, fellas, religion makes no difference—except maybe to a Nazi, or somebody that's stupid."

Christians like to complain about modern day Hollywood denigrating and downplaying Christianity. But even back in 1945, Hollywood was giving Oscars to a movie that says that anyone who thinks Christianity is at least as important as other religions is either a Nazi or stupid.

Sinatra then goes on to explain that we're all Americans, no matter what we believe, and "prejudice" and "intolerance" are wrong, because even though we all may not see eye to eye on religion, we've got to stick together to fight "the Japs." And, yes, he says "Japs," repeatedly. The kids then stare wide eyed as Sinatra breaks into an expurgated rendition of the title song.

> "Look, fellas, religion makes no difference —except maybe to a Nazi, or somebody that's stupid."

The film is based on the song of the same name, "The House I Live In." It's all about America being a multiracial, multicultural Disneyland. But the songwriter was livid that the moviemakers cut the verse that explicitly refers to Blacks out of the movie. He even got tossed out of a theater for protesting the excision. But the people that made the movie knew that America wasn't quite ready for a film promoting that much diversity, at least not just yet.

No matter. They had plenty of time, and now they push not only racial integration but miscegenation, mass migration and other anti-White narratives and initiatives non-stop. And it goes without saying that, if they were making the movie today, they would no doubt still leave in the line comparing evangelicals to Nazis for thinking religion is important, but they would most assuredly take out the lines about "the Japs."

Nowadays, of course, the message of the movie is considered mainstream. Who doesn't love "tolerance" and "diversity" these days? But, back then, the idea that race and religion were meaningless trivialities was only being pushed by radicals, Jews and Communists. Forced racial integration was considered to be a Communist plot, largely because it was in fact a Communist plot. And if you think I exaggerate, just consult the history books.

Christians and conservatives of today love to pretend as if they've always stood for and promoted interracial marriage, integrated schools, integrated churches, Civil Rights laws, and that Martin Luther King was the embodiment of Christian conservatism. But nothing could be further from the truth.

Conservative evangelical churches in the era between WWII and the 1970s railed against racial integration and opposed all efforts to mix the races. Probably not five White preachers out of a thousand would've conducted an interracial marriage in 1964.

Conservatives and Christians weren't "marching with Dr. King." The non-Blacks marching with MLK were Quakers, liberal apostate "Christians," Commies, beatniks and, overwhelmingly, Jews. (One of the rare exceptions was Billy Graham, and he certainly didn't take a prominent position in the Civil Rights crusade because he knew it would kill his ministry. But he did invite King to pray at a New York City revival and insisted on integrated seating at all his revival meetings. He was widely denounced by conservative Christians for these actions.)

Again, just check the history books if you doubt that modern day shibboleths on race were considered far out, dangerous radicalism by Americans up until quite recently, and that the people pushing such things were generally Communists.

But if you don't have time to read the history books, just watch the credits for The House I Live In. It's like a "Who's Who" of Hollywood Communism and radicalism. Sinatra was just their front man.

Let's start with the man who wrote the lyrics to the song on which the movie is based. In the movie he's credited as Lewis Allan, but don't pay any attention to that. His real name was Abel Meeropol. He also wrote "Strange Fruit," the song about lynching in the South that Billie Holiday made famous, and that TIME magazine called the most important song of the 20th century. Holiday claimed she wrote it in her autobiography, but that was a lie.

So, who was Abel Meeropol? The investigative journalist Max Blumenthal tells us that he was "a Jewish school teacher," but there's a bit more to it than that, quite a bit more. Remember Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the nice Jewish couple executed for giving our atomic secrets to the Soviet Union? Well, after they were executed, Meeropol adopted their kids. Was that because he took pity on the orphaned children? Possibly. It might also have to do with the fact that the Jewish school teacher was actually an ardent Communist himself. Funny how Blumenthal forgot to mention that.

FRANK SINATRA
"You're either stupid or a Nazi."

We have seen that the lyricist for the song that inspired the movie was some strange fruit, indeed. What about others?

Earl Robinson wrote the music for the song. You remember Earl, right? He was one of the notorious Hollywood Ten who were blacklisted for refusing to tell Congress whether or not they had ever been members of the Communist Party. Of course, every single one of the Hollywood Ten either was or had been a dedicated member of the Communist Party. Most still were.

Robinson also wrote the music for other songs, like "Ballad for Americans," an anthem about how race and religion don't matter. It was performed at the Communist Party national convention of 1940. (They also played it at the GOP convention that year, which ought to tell you something.)

Robinson also wrote "Black and White," a celebration of the Brown v. Board of Education travesty of jurisprudence. You've probably heard a watered-down version of "Black and White." Three Dog Night had a No. 1 hit with their less blatantly political version of the song in 1972.

So the guy who wrote the words to the song that inspired the movie was an America-hating Communist. And the guy who wrote the music was another Communist. Anyone else?

Well, there's also the guy who wrote the screenplay for the movie. His name was Albert Maltz and he, too, "was a man on the rise both inside and outside of the Communist Party."

Yes, The House I Live In and its message was a Communist production through and through. And make no mistake. The message of the movie wasn't that people shouldn't go around beating up Jews. We have no problem with that message as we oppose violence against anyone.

But that wasn't the message of the movie. The message was that religion and race are meaningless trivialities, and anyone who disagrees is either a "Nazi" or "stupid."

In 1945, that was a radical Communist idea. Now, it's a mainstream view parroted by nearly everyone. ❖

A Tribute to a Great Revisionist

Remembering Udo Walendy (1927–2022)

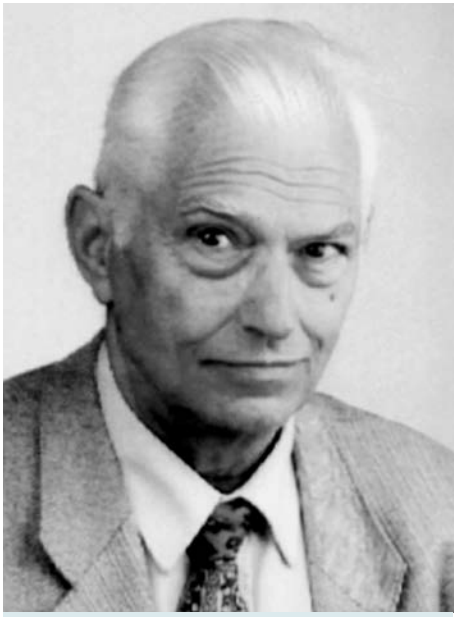
By Carolyn Yeager

There is not as much information on the internet as there should be for Udo Walendy, one of the most important Revisionist historians. But that's the story of our time.

Walendy was born in Berlin on January 21, 1927. He died on November 17, 2022, in the same city at the ripe age of 95. His best-known book is the classic Truth for Germany: The Guilt Question of the Second World War, first published in 1964, a book that remains a seminal work of Revisionist literature that is as relevant today as it was when it was first written.

He served in the Reich Labor Service and then as a teenage Luftwaffe helper before being drafted into the Wehrmacht when he turned 18 in 1945. Walendy completed his secondary education after the war, then attended journalism school in Aachen. Between 1950 and 1956, he studied political science at the Hochschule für Politik in West Berlin, receiving a diploma (a degree in Germany). For the next 10 years he was employed as the director of a folk high school (adult education) in Herford and as business leader of an employer's association in Bielefeld. (Remember, he was associated with "undesirable" political views in postwar Germany.)

In 1965, Walendy independently founded the Verlag für Volkstum und Zeitgeschichtsforschung (Publishing House for Folklore and Contemporary Historical Research) in Vlotho, which continues today under his wife Margarethe's name. It maintains close contact with the Belgian Revisionist organization Vrij Historisch Onderzoek (VHO).



UDO WALENDY
Daring German researcher.

AUTHOR & PUBLISHER

As early as 1964 he published his own book, Wahrheit für Deutschland: Die Schuldfrage des Zweiten Weltkriegs (Truth for Germany: The Question of Guilt for the Second World War), which in 1979 was listed by Germany's Federal Department for Media Harmful to Young Persons as material that could not be publicly advertised or given to young readers. The sole reason was that it differed from the official history in the way it presented the events that led up to World War II. In other words, it didn't put the full blame on Hitler and the Third Reich.

After a long legal battle, this restriction was lifted in 1994 on the grounds that Walendy's constitutional rights—as an academic—had been violated.

Walendy's historical Revisionist magazine series Historische Tatsachen (Historical Facts), continues to be published by the VHO in Flanders. It began in 1974 with a translation of Richard Harwood's booklet Did Six Million Really Die?

Walendy was also responsible for the German translation of Arthur Butz's groundbreaking book The Hoax of the Twentieth Century, which shed a shining light on so much of the faulty, often concocted "evidence" for the "Holocaust." Additionally, Walendy authored Forged War Crimes Malign the German Nation, a very popular resource not currently available at online booksellers but it can be downloaded online.

Udo Walendy was imprisoned in 1999 for 15 months for "publicly questioning the Holocaust" under Germany's Volksverhetzung law (incitement to hatred).

WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS

Walendy's pioneering research into the World Jewish Congress (WJC), which I have used to great benefit, is summed up in an article still on the internet titled "Unity in Dispersion: A History of the World Jewish Congress." I also published an article dealing with the WJC titled "The Hoax That Won't Die—How the World Jewish Congress Invented the Holocaust," which drew heavily on Walendy's research. That article is available on my website, CarolynYeager.net, and includes a link directly to Walendy's article previously mentioned.

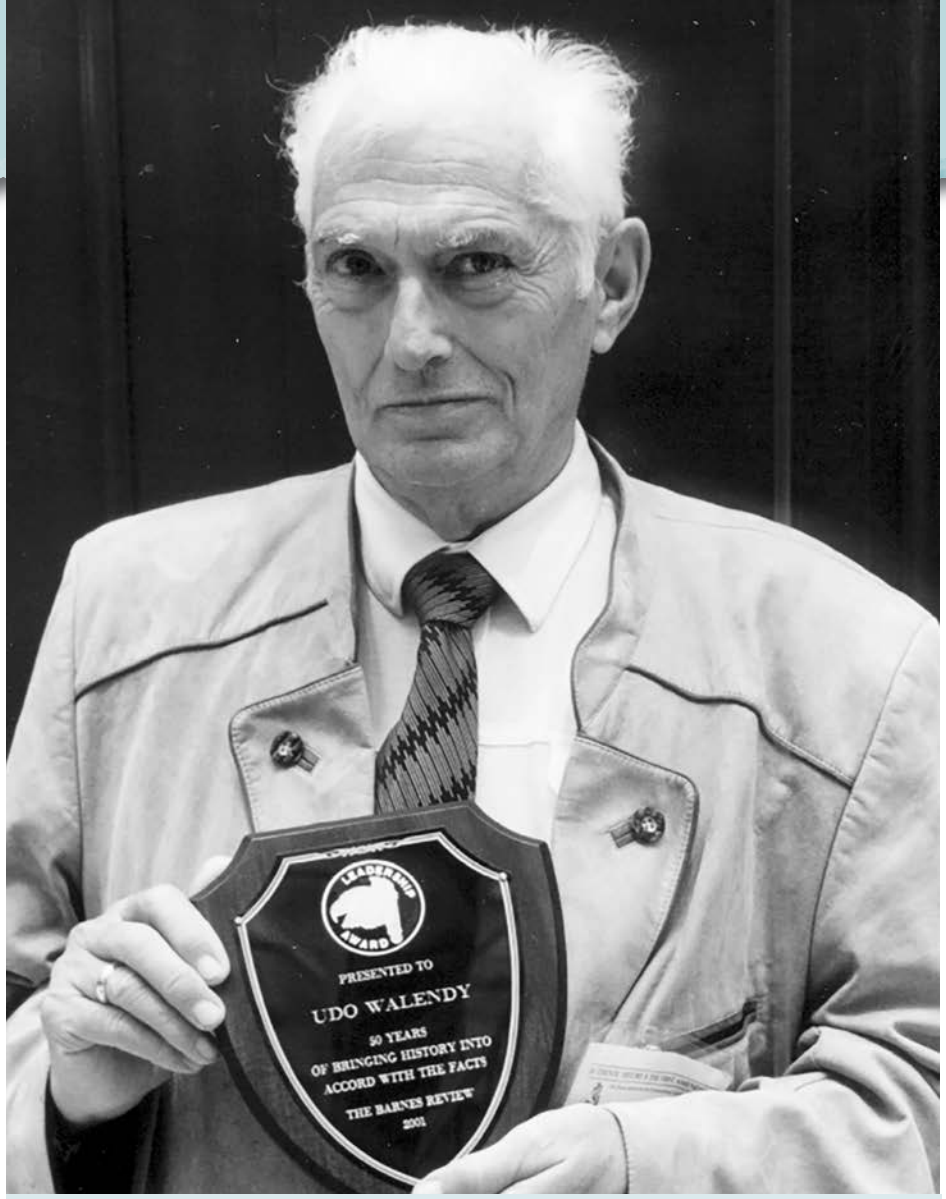
Walendy's investigation demonstrated conclusively that the "Holocaust" tale "was deliberately created by a few men in the upper ranks of the World Jewish Congress utilizing their tight network of influential, well-placed accomplices throughout Europe, Britain and the United States," I argued. I also noted that "the hoax of the Holocaust can be attributed to the World Jewish Congress far more than any other single entity."

Most critically, Walendy's work showed how "the very first unconfirmed reports of mass shootings of Jews came from the World Jewish Congress, and the first unconfirmed reports of gas chambers and mass cremations also came from the WJC."



Walendy was honored with a leadership award at the 2001 free speech conference sponsored by TBR in Washington, D.C. The plaque honored his "50 years of bringing history into accord with the facts."

TRUTH FOR GERMANY

Walendy's greatest contribution to Revisionism, however, remains his masterpiece Truth for Germany, a book that systematically debunks the outrageous lies spread about Adolf Hitler's Germany, which have enveloped the entire Western world. For generations, mainstream historians and Western political leaders have insisted that Germany was the primary instigator and aggressor responsible for initiating the fratricidal bloodbath known as WWII. Walendy disproves that common assumption, demonstrating that WWII was not the "Good War" we've been told it was. By relying on primary source documentation directly from the key players involved in the conflict, as well as the personal memoirs of some of the main political leaders, Walendy exposes the true origins of WWII and lays to rest the slanderous falsehoods regarding German war guilt that have been institutionalized in the West.

We've now lost one of the best of the German patriots, who continued to fight throughout all these years, sacrificing personal material ambitions and comfort in the interests of justice and truth for his so maltreated people. A true fighter.

Herzlichen Dank, Udo Walendy. ❖

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

CONCERN FOR U.S. DOLLAR

A word of advice to my fellow Americans: Be afraid. Be very, very afraid of the consequences of the soon-to-happen inevitable collapse of the American dollar as the benchmark international reserve currency.

Given that very soon the Russian ruble (which is backed by gold) and the Chinese yuan (which is backed by a basket of precious metals and commodities) will replace the U.S. dollar (which is merely a fiat currency—backed by nothing), it would be worthwhile to briefly outline the foreseeable economic consequences for us Americans.

The American dollar is a fiat debt-currency. For each and every dollar that is created by the Federal Reserve (Fed) a corresponding and equivalent debt is created. If all debt in this country were paid off completely, there would be no dollars in circulation. But it gets worse: in order to avoid an economic recession, it is necessary for the Fed to continuously inflate the money supply.

The consequence of this is that the value of the dollar is constantly and inexorably being eroded. The value of the dollar has fallen 86% since it was taken off of the gold standard by President Richard Nixon in 1971.

The U.S. dollar can be likened to a gigantic international Ponzi scheme. In order to maintain its value, it is in need of constant and continuous investment by domestic and foreign interests. This is no better seen than in the present employment of the U.S. dollar as the international reserve currency for the purchase of oil and gas. The current demand for the dollar is high because foreign nations that want to trade in gas or oil use the U.S. dollar as the benchmark currency. Were the dollar to lose its status as the benchmark international reserve currency, very dire consequences indeed would follow, especially for Americans.

For example, if the dollar were replaced as the sole benchmark international reserve currency by the BRICS nations (Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa), the demand for U.S. dollars would drop precipitously. As a consequence of this, no one would want to purchase U.S. government debt in the form of bonds and, if government bonds cannot be financed, there would be no money to finance the running of the government, especially government programs and agencies.

Welfare, social security, housing subsidies, as well as local services (garbage pick-up, streetlights, police protection etc.) would have to be cut. Unemployment would skyrocket, people would not be able to afford their mortgages and widespread crime, looting and rioting would most likely follow in its wake. Revolution would almost certainly ensue.

Since the dollar is a fiat currency built on a gigantic Ponzi scheme, the dire consequences outlined above are inevitable. The U.S. can postpone the inevitable by punishing and isolating the looming international replacement currency nations of Russia (hence our funding of Ukraine in its U.S.-orchestrated war vs. Russia) and China (by saber-rattling U.S. support for an independent Taiwan), and by going so far as to covertly threaten nuclear Armageddon should the U.S. dollar be supplanted as the international reserve currency.

So, what can we do? Not much. Of course, if you have money now you could invest in gold and silver or, for that matter, in rubles and yuans, but what about those who do not have such disposable, investible income or wealth? What can they do? Not much.

I fear disaster for the 90% of us who do not have the financial wherewithal to protect ourselves from the inevitable collapse.

RITUAL MURDER?

I'd like to promote a subject as a topic worthy of further examination in the coming year: The Black Dahlia murder in 1947 had all the hallmarks of a modern day Jewish ritual murder. This includes an exsanguinated body with barbarities and a "clown face" contemptuously cut into it plus a body further desecrated by burns and other butcheries, left deliberately unburied in an open field with its legs spread open to make her easy to find and to add to the humiliation of her family. Perhaps a good project for author Hervé Ryssen?

READ NEW TESTAMENT

The article "The Infiltration and Subversion of the Catholic Church" by Mike Mains in the TBR July/August 2022 issue was very interesting but there are factual problems with it. He has lots of truths about the Catholic Church, but even more errors. It seems the author does not know the New Testament.

First, I was born and raised a Catholic and remained so until I was 31 years old. I am currently 84 years old and a disabled veteran. I have a B.A. in theology and a Master's Degree in Christian education. I preached for the Church of Christ for over 38 years. I went to the Sunset School of preaching from January 1971 to January 1972 and studied every book of the Bible.

Here are a few errors I want to correct:

- The Catholic Church was not established as such until A.D. 606.

• Read carefully Matthew 16:18 from a Greek Bible and you will find that Jesus did not declare Peter the pope. Verse 18: "You are Peter," or "Petros," which means very strong or a stone, but one that can be picked up and cast. "Upon this rock I will build My church." The word for rock in Greek is "petra"—a very large rock or bedrock, something that cannot be picked up and cast aside.

• Also read Matthew 23:1-12. The terms rabbi, teacher, father, reverend … these are titles used mainly by the Catholic Church. Read 1 Timothy 4:1-8.

All of these practices preceded the Catholic Church.

A few more things. Catholic titles for Mary include "Mother of God," "Queen of Heaven" and "Our Mediator" or "Intercessor." But where are any of these titles found in the New Testament? Mary is also referred to as a "perpetual Virgin"—but the New Testament clearly says she had seven children.

Good article, but Mr. Mains needs to read the New Testament more carefully and, preferably, from a side-by-side Greek-English translation.

There are good reasons why the Catholic Church was infiltrated so easily—and why I left it years ago. It is not the true church.

DENIERS

I am not sure if you are aware of this. It happened some time ago. In February 2022, a New York Times obituary headline read: "Mel Mermelstein, 95, who survived the Holocaust and beat deniers in court dies." The article said he died of "complications from Covid-19," but did not say if he had been vaccinated and boosted.

Suffice it to say, if he was dumb enough to believe in the hoax of the 20th century, then he was probably dumb enough to get boosted. If he had been unvaccinated, then I know the Times would have said so.

So, in short, Mermelstein was able to survive Adolf Hitler, able to survive Dr. Josef Mengele, but he was unable to survive Dr. Anthony Fauci and his willing executioners Rachel Walensky, Albert Bourla, Tal Zaks, Timothy Springer, Robert Langer and all the other "Judenrat" establishment Zionist organizations.

Too bad for Mel. If only he had listened to the rest of us "anti-Semitic Holocaust deniers" and "vaccine deniers" (or, in my case, a "self-hating Jew") instead of the misanthropic Jewish Zionist organizations, he might still be here today.

At the height of the pandemic I saw advertisements offering "Holocaust survivors" a free ride to a "vaccine site."

I would like to recommend to Mr. Mermelstein's survivors that they should sue Fauci. What an incredible Orwellian world of lies we live in.

AMERICAN MASONRY

I am an American Mason, and it always makes me chuckle when I read articles about how awful Masons are. But, after reading the book Jewish Freemasonry: Two Treatises by Édouard Drumont and Nicolae Paulescu, I'm beginning to see why Europeans and Middle Easterners are so suspicious of their Masons.

This book shows in great detail that the Masons in France were plain evil. French Masonry was a purely Torah- or Old Testament-based club. Absolutely nothing in that book would even remotely remind one of Masonic teachings in our country. Those Masonic traditions in France are the exact opposite of U.S. ones.

That still doesn't excuse pontificating and moralizing Christians from what they have done. They have raped, looted, murdered and spread general mayhem throughout Europe for centuries. If you know what to look for, you can still see today the traces of the seemingly constant movement of militarized mobs roaming the lands. And they did it always in the name of Christ. In Germany, for instance, scars from centuries of violence are still visible—from long before the world wars.

But the French and English can sing a song, too, about what happened in their countries. Remember the "great" Oliver Cromwell and his pogroms? Of course, the hapless Europeans knew that whenever there was warring going on, there were the agitators and financiers, facilitators, persuaders—the ultimate and primary if not exclusive winners and beneficiaries of war.

The story about Christianity would not be complete without the mention that, while many Christians looted, raped and banned scientific research, many others were quietly and modestly doing crucial pioneering scientific research, sponsoring architectural wonders and instituting advanced agricultural techniques, but also tended to the poor and needy.
